NO LICENSE FOR THE FAMOUS DOG TAVERN

APPLICATION OF ALEXANDER ACKERMAN REFUSED BY JUDGE ATWATER.

The famous Dog Tavern, which has been a favorite resort for sportsmen, automobile parties and others, is now "dry" for the first time in thirty years. This morning in the Union County Court, Judge Atwater denied the application of Alexander Ackerman for a license. The action was based on the strong remonstrances of the people residing in the neighborhood, F. M. Masker taking the initiative in protesting against the granting of the license. From time to time complaints have been made concerning the way in which the Inn was managed.

James Taylor formerly conducted the Inn before the present proprietor took it, and there was more or less complaint than about the disorder around the place. It was declared in court that Plainfielders flocked to the tavern on Sunday and that drunks, both men and women, were a common sight.

The court refused the license on two grounds, the first being that there was no necessity for the place being licensed and secondly because Ackerman did not intend to run the place himself, but proposed to engage James Gallagher for that purpose.

SEMINARY EXHIBIT.

Pupils Work Viewed by Parents and Friends Yesterday.

An exhibition of drawing and work in the primary department of the Plainfield Seminary on West Seventh street yesterday afternoon was full of pleasure to those interested in the work of the pupils. The walls of Seminary Hall were hung with specimens of the year's work, the best of it being honored with a gilt star. Under the careful training of Miss Lewis, of Poughkeepsie, much proficiency was shown in free hand, still life, cast drawing, life and nature work, water colors, stencil plate, original composition and original designs in wall paper. The latter were exceptionally good both in design and color. The compiled books made by the students of history and art were also beautiful specimens of work.

The walls of the well equiped primary room were covered with expressions of form and color, being the beginnings of artistic production.

The additions to the Seminary made last summer include a fine gymnasium, the large primary room, several recitation rooms, a laboratory, supply, cloak and toilet rooms, adding greatly to the working facilities of the school and the health and comfort of the pupils.

WHITTAKER STILL ALIVE.

Condition Worse, But the Hospital Doctors Marvel at His Vitality.

Fred Stevens Whittaker, the young man who shot himself in the head in an attempt to commit suicide Decoration Day afternoon, was still alive early this afternoon. His condition was worse than it was yesterday, and death is likely to occur at any time, but the physicians consider the fact that he has lived as long as this remarkable. The bullet is in the brain somewhere. There are a few cases on record where men have recovered from bullet wounds in the brain, and the doctors of the city are watching the case with great interest.

While the young man's antecedents are something of a mystery still, it was learned yesterday that he was not of titled family. A man who knew him well, and to whom he had often spoken of himself, said Whittaker had told him that his family was a good one, but not aristocratic.

ONE-DAY GOLF CONTEST

Chairman Erickson of Plainfield Club Tournament Committee, Issues Program.

EXPECT NOTED PLAYERS

Walter J. Travis and Findlay Douglass Will Be Among the Players—Value of Cups Will Aggregate $160.

Julius E. Erickson, who is chairman of the tournament committee for the one-day eighteen hole medal play handicap tournament, open to all men who are members of clubs enrolled in the association and to invited guests of the club, has issued the programme for the event. This tournament to be given at the Plainfield Country Club on Saturday, June 15, is the first of the kind ever held at the local club and it promises to be a great success. Already assurances have been received from many of the crack players in the association and the entry list will be a large one.

Among those who will take part in the tournament are Walter J. Travis and Findlay Douglass, who are among the best players in the country. All the clubs in the association will be well represented.

Competitors may start at any time between noon and four o'clock in the afternoon and it has been arranged to pair the competitors at the tee. Each one must have a handicap before starting. If a member of a club in the association and not rated this year, he must present, before starting a letter from his club secretary, stating how many strokes he receives at his home club from some player who is rated. Unless these conditions are complied with the right is reserved to give any such player a very low handicap or even to place him at scratch.

The Plainfield Country Club is arranging the tournament and for the purpose of making it worth while, has set aside $160 for six silver cups to be offered as prizes in the competition. There will be a prize for the best gross score, one for the second best gross score, one for the third best gross score, one for the best net score, one for the second best net score and one for the third best net score. This gives all a good opportunity to win at least one of the prizes. No competitor shall be eligible to win more than one prize and no member of the Plainfield Country Club shall be eligible to win either the prize for the best gross or the prize for the best net score.

All the members of the Metropolitan Golf Association who are rated on the association handicap list for 1907 may compete without formal entry of any kind, and members who are not rated must enter through their club secretaries. All entries should be addressed to Julius E. Erickson, Plainfield. Those not mailed before June 13 may be handed to the tournament committee on the tee; but players whose entries are sent in advance will be given the preference in starting.

All competitors shall be considered to have subjected themselves to the authority of the Tournament committee whose decision on all points shall be final. Of course, the committee reserves the right to alter the program before or during the tournament if considered advisable.

Decoration Day Outings.

Ninety-one Plainfielders enjoyed the Plainfield Grocers' Association annual excursion to Coney Island, Thursday. The many other attractions of the day no doubt was responsible for the limited number going on this outing, but the day was pleasantly passed at the popular resort and no accidents occurred to mar the trip. The New Jersey Central excursion to Mauch Chunk took sixteen cars and about twenty Plainfielders made the trip, while a half dozen enjoyed the railroad's excursion to Lake Hopatcong.

Zikers and Things.

E. D. Cutting and Dr. A. H. Dundon will be among a large number of candidates to be initiated into Salaam Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., in Newark on June 3. The meeting will be followed by a banquet, at which there will be many zikers on the virtues. The rub'rnekhs will make medinah on the minarets. H. W. Marshall is chief rabban of the Temple. A number of Plainfielders will attend the dinner.

Engineering Committee at Work.

There are no new developments in the work of the water commission. The engineering committee is at work collecting data, which, when completed, will be presented to the commission for consideration. There will be no meeting of the commission until all of the facts are obtained.

WIFE TRIES TO CONVICT HUSBAND IN CITY COURT.

Mrs. Vincent Popek Appears to Support Unproved Charge Against Her Spouse.

The charge of driving Mrs. Lawrence Mallinson and her two-months' old baby out of their house made against Vincent Popek by Mallinson fell to the ground in the city court this morning. The testimony did not support the accusation at all, and evidence was brought to prove that Popek, part of whose house the Mallinson's rent, had suffered annoyances at the hands of the tenants.

An incident of the hearing was the appearance of Mrs. Popek against her husband. She testified against him as vigorously as she could, and acknowledged that she came to court to convict him if possible.

In dismissing the charge, Judge Runyon said that the persistence of the tenants in continuing the tenancy after all the trouble and the plainness of the fact that that tenancy was mainly responsible for the clashes and kept Mr. and Mrs. Popek at odds, had weaned his sympathy from the contestants. He advised Mrs. Popek in whose name the house stands, to serve notice of dispossess on the tenants.

POLICE BOARD MEETING.

Members Decide to Put Two More Officers on the Force.

The Councilmanic Police Board met last night and decided to put on two more men, if suitable candidates can be found for the positions. It has been a difficult matter to get men for police duty, those who can pass the physical and mental examinations required by the board. If the men can be found they will take the places of those who have resigned from the force.

Two members of the department were before the board last night, one accused of being asleep on his post and the other charged with disobeying the orders of Captain Frederickson. Nominal fines with a warning were imposed.

The members of the board decided that hereafter they would meet every month on the Friday night preceding the regular meeting of the Common Council to dispose of any business that may come before them.

FOR MISSION WORK.

Queen Esther Circle, of Grace M. E. Church, Gives a Play.

The Queen Esther Circle of Grace M. E. church, an auxiliary home mission organization, held an entertainment at the church last night for the benefit of a girl whose education the circle is paying for at a misssion school. The affair was a great success.

The feature of the entertainment was a play, "The Scarlet Bonnet," in which the seven members of the circle took part. They performed excellently and won warm applause. The seven are the Misses Marion Major, Edna Stout, Alice Vroom, Grace Beeching, Edna Beeching, Stella Kline, and Bessie Conroy.

Miss Jennie Nelson played piano solos. After the entertainment the members served cake and lemonade. Mrs. E. P. Stevens is in charge of the circle.

Planning for Matinee Races.

The Fair Acres Driving and Riding Club, retaining its name, has merged with the Plainfield Driving Association, and in the future will hold its trotting meets at the Gentlemen's Driving Park on Park avenue. There will be a meeting of the officers of the Association, which includes members from Cranford, Westfield, Somerville, New Brunswick and this city, at the Hotel Iroquois Monday night to complete arrangements for the first matinee meet Sateurday afternoon, June 8. There will be a large list of entries from the above-named places.

Arrested by a Citizen.

Tony Byers, of New York, a colored man who looks like a white man, was handed over to Captain Frederickson at the station house last night by William Walters, a trolley employee, who heard him using filthy language in the presence of women near the trolley station on Watchung avenue. He was penitent this morning, but it cost him $5 to get away from the city court. The money was brought into court by a negro as black in degree as he was white. They made a startling contrast in tints as they left the court together.

KEEP SCHOOL DAY PACT

Charles B. Morse Will Travel 5,000 Miles In Order to Be at Chum's Wedding.

AT CANON CITY, COL.

Agreed With Walter Rittenhouse "To Go Half Around the World" To Be His Best Man.

To keep a compact made twelve years ago, when both were students at the Plainfield High School, Charles B. Morse, of Franklin place, left town yesterday for Canon City, Col., where he will act as best man at the wedding of Walter B. Rittenhouse, a former Plainfielder, who will marry Miss Theo L. Rogers, of that place, next Thursday.

When Mr. Morse and Mr. Rittenhouse graduated in the class of 1895 of the Plainfield High School, both laughingly referred to the future, and the former remarked:

"Whenever you get married, Walter, I'll go half way around the world, if necessary, to be your best man."

"And I'll do the same for you," was the reply.

The incident passed from the minds of both for the time being, but it came back to Rittenhouse a few weeks ago, when he made plans to marry Miss Rogers. He is at present superintendent of a large power plant at Duluth, Minn., but met the young woman during a Western trip. When he wrote to Morse asking if he would keep his promise about being best man, the reply was in the affirmative. The distance to Canon City from Plainfield is about 2,500 miles. Rittenhouse is a graduate of Stevens Institute and is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George B. Rittenhouse, of Sandford avenue.

The best man-elect is the head of the publicity department of the Ingersoll-Rand Company and is a former local newspaper man. He will return East directly after the ceremony.

Mr. Morse is congratulating himself that he did not have to go "half way around the world" as he agreed to do as since the day of the compact Mr. Rittenhouse has been in all parts of the globe. A short time after he left school, he was seized with the "wanderlust" and made to journey to Japan where he spent three months. During that time he and a companion cruised in the Inland sea, touching parts that had never been penetrated by Europeans before. From there he went to San Francisco and thence across the continent home, completing the trip around the world.

Mr. Rittenhouse had been home but a few months when he again decided to "look around" and went to Vancouver. From there he shipped down to South America and purely for the adventure of the thing, undertook a trip over the Andes mountains on foot, accompanied only by a young Englishman. After a perilous trip, during which they encountered innumerable wild animals and unfriendly natives, they reached the head waters of the Amazon. They made their way down the river in canoes to Rio Janierio. At that point Rittenhouse was stricken with fever and was in a hospital many weeks before recovering sufficiently to take passage on a steamer for New York.

He also took two canoe trips in the wilds of British Columbia and since assuming his position at Duluth has made excursions to all parts of the United States.

No Cause of Action.

Judge Newcorn rendered his decision today in the suit of Stanley & Wagner against Mrs. Anna Scriven, which was tried Tuesday morning. The verdict is no cause of action. The plaintiffs sued for money due on books purchased by the defendant's son. They contended that she made herself responsible for the debt when she signed a receipt for the books, the receipt having printed on it a clause referring to the enclosed contract." H. C. Runyon appeared for the defendant.

Knights Going to Port Chester.

Crescent Commandery, No. 13, U. R. K. of P. will make its annual trip to Port Chester, N. Y. tomorrow, to decorate the grave of Harvey L. Patterson. The start will be made from the North avenue station on the 8.52 train. The company will observe its customary memorial services on Sunday, June 23.

Engagement Announced.

Mrs. Emma L. Baldwin, of Dunellen, announced today the engagement of her daughter, Miss Mary A. Baldwin, to Thomas R. Beck, of Elizabeth. The wedding will take place next month at the home of Mrs. W. R. Hetfield, of Dunellen, aunt of the bride-to-be.

FORMER LOCAL MERCHANT PASSES AWAY IN NEW YORK

JAMES E. WHITE WAS A PIONEER IN THE DRY GOODS BUSINESS HERE.

James E. White, who was a well-known and successful dry goods merchant in Plainfield for many years, died at the home of his sister, Mrs. Frank Reaqua, on 82d street, New York, following an attack of heart trouble. He was taken ill at Morristown about six weeks ago and decided to go to his sister's home in New York.

Mr. White was born at Pine Plains, N. Y., seventy-one years ago today. In the year 1875 he came to Plainfield and engaged in the dry goods business, his first store being at East Front street and Watchung avenue. He remained there about ten years when he moved to where A. M. Griffen's store is now. A little later he sold out to the firm of Edsall & Price, after which he went to Georgia, where he remained for two years. Returning to Plainfield he again engaged in the dry goods business, locating this time where the Plainfield Savings Bank is now situated. He remained there four years and then moved to where "The White Store" is now on West Front street. He continued in business for several years when he was succeeded by his son, Edward White. In 1890 he moved to Morristown, where he opened a dry goods store. This he conducted until five years ago. On account of his poor health and heart trouble he retired from business.

Surviving him are a wife and five children—Mrs. L. H. Taylor, of Rutherford; Mrs. Hardy Schley, of Orange; Miss Edith White, who lives at Morristown; Charles White, of Elizabeth, and Edward White, of this city. The interment took place at Pine Plains, N. Y.

One of our clients owed $48 between four people. His salary is $14 weekly; rent $12 monthly. To have paid $2 weekly to each creditor, combined with rent, would have left only $3 per week to meet expenses, buy clothing, etc.—an impossibility you will agree. He borrowed $50, paid all his creditors, made his future credit good, if ever needed; pays his rent, the loan payments, and has $9 each week to use as his judgment dictates.

MORAL:—Do likewise and avoid worry. Come in and we will talk it over with you, or drop a postal and a confidential representative will call on you.

PLAINFIELD LIBRARY NOTES

Recent Additions to the Public Library Which May Be Borrowed On Non-Fiction Cards.

Part 2.

Langland, William.—Visions of Piers plowman, done into modern English by Prof. Skeat.

"For many years teachers of English history have been hoping for some such book as this. 'Piers Plowman' is full of passages which reflect the every day life of the people, town and country at the end of the 14th century. . . . We commend this little volume to all students and teachers of English history and literature." Athenaeum, April 29, '05.

Lee, Sydney.—Shakespeare and the modern stage.

"A large portion of the book discusses, as its title indicates, methods of representing Shakespeare on the modern stage. The attempt is there made to define, in the light of experience, the conditions which are best calculated to conserve or increase Shakespeare's genuine vitality in the theatre of our own day." Preface.

Leonard, William Ellery.—Sonnets and poems.

Lowell, Percival.—Mars and its canals.

Lucas, Edward Verrall, comp.—Friendly town: a little book for the urbane.

"Is without qualification, a most delightful and attractive book." Academy, Nov. 18, '05.

Maccunn, Florence A.—Mary Stuart. Illustrated.

"A history of Mary Stuart: her early home, Court and times, with a strong personal note." Publisher's note.

Macmaster, John Beach.—History of the people of the United States v. 6.

Mayer, Alfred Goldsborough.—Sea-shore life. (N. Y. Zoological Society.)

"Dr. Mayer has succeeded in the difficult task of presenting in a readable and popular form a good deal of information regarding the habits and distribution of the lower marine animals of the coast of New York and of Long Island." T. H. Morgan in Science, Dec. 1, 1905.

Neil, C. L.—Modern conjurer and drawing-room entertainer.

Norton, Charles Eliot.—Henry Wadsworth Longfellow: a sketch of his life.

"Prof. Norton's memoir presents the real Longfellow as his contemporaries knew him, and the poems selected are especially expressive of the poet's individuality." Publisher's note.

Oleson, Charles W., M. D., comp.—Secret nostrums and systems.

Perry, Bliss.—Walt Whitman: his life and work.

"Mr. Bliss Perry's work is modest [illegible] pass, but shows throughout [illegible] has studied the documents [illegible] care and patience. . . . In general the narrative portions are well [illegible] and properly balanced. . . . Much [illegible] most important sections of the [illegible] deal with sources, and here Mr. [illegible] has a field almost entirely his [illegible]" Nation.

Pitman, Isaac.—Short course in [illegible] shorthand.

Rhodes, James Ford.—History of the United States from 1850-1877. vs. 6 and 7.

Richards, Mrs. E. H. S.—Plain words about food.

Shuckburgh, Evelyn Shirley.—Story of ancient Greece. (Story of the nations.)

Seton, Ernest Thompson.—Animal heroes.

"The author's power has increased as his style has became more simple, and his allegiance to plain facts more indisputable. He has never told a story more dramatically than that of 'Little War Horse,' the Jack rabbit, or more touchingly than that of Arnaux the Homing pigeon." Dial, D. 1, '05.

Sharp Williams, Macleod, Fiona, pseud.—Washer of the ford; legendary moralities.

Sherman, Andrew M.—History of Morristown, N. J.: the story of its First Century.

Smith, Mrs. Samuel Harrison.—First forty years of Washington society.

"A brilliant volume of reminiscences covering an almost untouched period in the history of the social life at the Capital. The author was Margaret Bayard, who marrried Samuel Harrison Smith, the distinguished journalist, and who by his position came in contact with the leading statesmen. . . . The literary foreigners who came to this country all went to Washington and visited Mrs. Smith and are described by her." Publisher's note.

Tuttle, Right Rev. Daniel S.—Reminiscences of a missionary bishop.

"Bishop Tuttle writes helpfully of his twenty years as missionary bishop in the Rocky Mountains." "It is a solid contribution to American history. These reminiscences abound in quotable stories; but their value is for much more than amusement." Rt. Rev. Cameron Mann, in N. Y. Times, Oct. 6, 1906.

Walker, Williston.—John Calvin: the organizer of reformed protestantism.

"It is an excellent piece of work. While by no means light reading, the book is clear and straightforward, and it makes the real man Calvin live before us his strange life, so far-reaching in its influence." Dial, Nov. 1, '06.

Wendell, Barrett.—English composition.

White, Cleeson.—Children's books and their illustrations.

Wilkins, William Henry.—Mrs. Fitzherbert and George IV.

"These papers and letters with other new material, and many rare portraits, make a volume of unusual value and interest." Publisher's note.

BREAKING WILD HORSES.

The Science of Broncho Busting to Be Exemplified With Buffalo Bill's Wild West.

The first claim to recognition as an institution for educating the unlearned in American history which the management makes for Buffalo Bill's Wild West and Congress of Rough Riders of the World is the very genuineness of it all. Everything concerned in the entertainment is as near authenticity as human ingenuity and the unrestricted expenditure of money can make it. Historic in its origin, Buffalo Bill's Wild West has always maintained its established record for genuineness in all things.

It will therefore be interesting to lovers of horseflesh in all varieties to learn that there will be a display of broncho-busting during the progress of the exhibition when Buffalo Bill and his big organization appears at Newark on Monday, June 10. The art of broncho busting has engaged the most daring members of the cowboy fraternity since the days when cowboys were first an established necessity in some features of western development. It is a most dangerous calling and many lives have been sacrificed in the conflict between the wild horse of the plains and the master hand which has attempted his subjection.

There need be no fear but what the broncho busting in Buffalo Bill's Wild West will be an exact reproduction of the original article, for it will be the genuine thing, and every time a cowboy mounts his horse he will take a great risk of broken bones. The cowboys will be real cowboys brought from the western wilds where they have plied their avocation of herding cattle and busting bronchoes all their lives. The world is seeing practically the last of this picturesque type of Americans for the fencing of the ranges is fast doing away with their occupation.

It has never been fully explained just why a broncho bucks, but many different theories have, of course, been advanced. It is said by some that they buck because of nervousness; by others because of fear, others genuine cussedness, and this theory is the most accepted. The methods they employ largely vary, but are generally along certain lines of bodily contortion. They will jump into the fair and land on all four feet stiff-legged; some will jump to the left and then quickly to the right, some half turning in their flight and always kicking, snorting and bucking.

In Buffalo Bill's exhibitions there are employed on theatrical device of training to impel the bronchos to buck. They buck of their own free will and are evidently glad to do it. They have been picked from hundreds of buckers of the west and are experts in the uncomfortable art of making themselves disagreeable to those who attempt to ride them. One of the later developments of the Wild West organization is the introduction of cowgirls to perform, in a certain degree, the difficult feat of making a bucking horse submit to their mastery. These girls are experts, too; and like all other features with Buffalo Bill's organization they are genuine types of western character; real; true to life, practical cowgirls.

P. R. R. IS PLANTING 550,000 MORE TREES.

Earnestly Pushing the Work With a View to a Future Tie Supply.

The Pennsylvania Railroad was never more in earnest about any scheme tending to the betterment of the road than it is now on the very important feature of tree planting for tie purposes.

The work of forest planting by the P. R. R. was inaugurated several years ago with a view to its future tie supply. Now the work of setting out 550,000 additional trees has been begun, and is progressing on a large scale at Mount Union, Pa., where about 225,000 trees are to be planted while the same number, or more, red oak trees are to be set out in the vicinity of Altoona at once.

At Hollidaysburg a forest nursery is being created, about 135 pounds of seed are being planted and many trees are being set out in nursery beds for next year's planting. When the spring's planting is completed the company will have about one thousand acres under tree cultivation. Some 2,250,000 trees will [illegible] been set out in [illegible] t[illegible] pl[illegible]

BY JOSEPH BROWN COOKE

COPYRIGHT 1907 BY STORY-PRESS CORPORATION

"And the parson's!" interrupted her friend, with a laugh.

"Yes, the parson's," continued Miss Carney, flushing faintly as a smile flitted across her face. "They were going to some kind of a convention and they were everywhere; in the forecastle, praying with the sailors; in the smoking room casting horrified glances at less sanctified passengers who ventured to drink or play; at the table before the places were fairly laid; and—"

"Under an awning, back of a ventilator, making voilent love to Miss Carney of Carney-Croft!" gurgled Miss Weston in a tone of waggish softness. How are we to address you in the future, my dear: 'The Rev. Mrs. Simpkins,' or 'Mrs. Rev. Simpkins,' or what, pray?"

"Wasn't he awful, Nan!" cried Miss Carney, laughing heartily. "And did you hear him saying good-by to the steward as we were coming into the dock?"

Turning to me she explained. "The chief steward was quite deaf and the reverend gentleman grasped him fervently by the hand and, rolling his eyes to heaven, said earnestly: 'Good-by, steward, good-by! I hope we may meet again; if not on earth perhaps in the home above!' 'Eh! eh!' cried the steward, putting his hand to his ear. 'Wot line are ye goin' by?'

"How sailors do dislike to have clergymen on shipboard!" said Mrs. Randolph, in a conventionally apologetical tone as if, in her character of chaperone, she must be properly shocked at the levity of Miss Carney's narrative; but our merriment was too real to be subdued by a look, and at length she gave up entirely and laughed as heartily as the rest at the cleverly told little anecdote.

"There must be some reason for it," said Miss Weston with a chuckle, and then she added roguishly: "The captain said we were lucky to get home at all with such a 'delegation of dominies' on board to enrage the elements and drive the officers to suicide!"

By this time the customs inspector had finished with the hand luggage and Miss Carney, followed by the others, made her way to the end of the pier to the carriage I had provided for their use, leaving her maid to look after the trunks and heavier pieces of baggage.

"You must come, too," she insisted, as I was about to close the door of the brougham. "You know, Martha was born and brought up in New York and she can attend to the trunks and find her way to the hotel without the slightest difficulty. Besides," she continued, as I obediently took the vacant place opposite her, "I want to see you, and talk to you, and hear some good 'United States' spoken again."

Her eyes fairly sparkled and her expression of vivacity made her face radiant.

"There are so many things I want to ask," she went on, "that I don't know where to begin, except that you must tell me the very earliest minute that we can start for home."

"Any minute you wish," I replied, laughing. "The place is ready and waiting for its mistress."

"Why, how did you ever manage to do it all so soon?" she exclaimed in unfeigned delight. Then, turning to Mrs. Randolph, she continued: "Mr. Ware is one of the most wonderful men in the world! He must be descended from the genii of old, for I can hardly express a wish to him before it is fulfilled. How did you do it, Mr. Ware?"

"It wasn't a very difficult task, Miss Carney," I replied, with becoming modesty. "You see, being on the spot, as I was, I could direct the work to so much better advantage, and—"

"Why! were you there yourself?" she exclaimed in amazement; and then, turning her face away, a faint flush, scarcely visible at first, crept slowly up from her cheeks until it was lost under the little ringlets of soft [illegible] within [illegible] nestled about her ears [illegible] on fire.

My h[illegible]emed to rise in my [illegible] to beat so violently that its throbbings became somewhat audible as I said, somewhat sheepishly:

"Yes, I was there all the time. I went expecting to stay only a day or so, but there were so many things to be attended to that I stayed on and let the time go to my vacation."

"It couldn't have been much of a vacation," she exclaimed, regaining her composure in an instant, "and I don't intend that you shall be treated so shabbily. Mrs. Randolph, won't you please ask Mr. Ware to visit us at Carney-Croft for a fortnight after we get settled? If he makes any excuses I will order him to come in his professional capacity. You see, you can't escape us if you would," she laughed, and the matter was settled.

When we reached the hotel Miss Carney insisted on my ramaining to luncheon, explaining that she wished to talk over some business matters with me in the afternoon.

It was a merry quartette that assembled around the table in the dining-room of Miss Carney's apartments, and my memory naturally carried me back to my first luncheon with her, over three years before. The anxious, tearful expression of the past had given way to a countenance beaming with vivacity, health and peace with all the world, and her soft, ruddy complexion, heightened by the voyage across the Atlantic, enhanced, if such a thing were possible, the glorious beauty of her face.

We chattered in a delightfully unconventional way until luncheon was over and then Mrs. Randolph tactfully left us to ourselves to discuss business matters in the sitting-room, while Miss Weston, who was the very antithesis of Miss Carney by reason of her ill health and frail constitution, retired for her usual afternoon nap.

The moment we were alone Miss Carney's levity and frivolity left her, and, motioning me to a seat by her side, she plunged at once into the consideration of a mass of details concerning Carney-Croft and its affairs. Suddenly she surprised me by asking pointedly:

"Why did you remain at Carney-Croft longer than you had first intended? Was it solely to superinfend the opening of the house or was it for some other reason?"

This question, put to me so ingenuously, could be answered only with the utmost frankness, and I said earnestly: "There was another reason, Miss Carney, and an important one."

Then I told her the whole story, as far as its practical features were concerned, but avoided, as much as possible, the recital of any unnecessary details.

"So you think this will all be stopped, now that you know who the ringleaders are?" she asked, anxiously.

"I am sure that it will," I replied, more positively than my true feelings warranted. "There has been no more of it since we learned who wrote the notes and it looks as if Jenks and this Bruce woman were going to keep the affair entirely to themselves. Besides, the new house the widow has is much better than the old one, and she has considerably more land than before. She ought to be perfectly satisfied with her present situation and stop her performances, if only for her own sake."

"But about their getting in and out of the house whenever they want to?" queried Miss Carney. "Don't you think it is rather dangerous to have any such mysteriously hidden entrance entirely unknown to us? Might they not get in again, while we are there, and take things or do something of that sort?"

"Oh, no!" I replied, reassuringly. "You may be certain they won't do that. If they had wanted to steal they'd have done it long ago, when they had the place to themselves. I think they had a key that opened one of the doors, and I've had new locks put all over the house. They couldn't get in now if they tried."

"What was said in the notes?" asked Miss Carney. "I wish you had saved them. I should have enjoyed seeing them, I know."

"Oh, nothing of any consequence," I replied, hastily. "Just a few words warning me not to allow you to return and expressed in regulation penny-dreadful style. The whole thing was crudely and awkwardly done and I am sure we have heard the last of it."

"I hope we have," she rejoined, earnestly. "I am very fond of Carney-Croft, and, while I don't believe in ghosts, and shouldn't fear them if I did, I cannot say that I fancy the idea or having human prowlers about the place. I know that we can get rid of them sooner or later, but I trust they won't cause us any annoyance at all."

"I said what I could to reassure her, and, as I was going away, she offered her hand and held mine while she said softly:

"You have been very thoughtful of my interests and happiness, Mr. Ware, and I appreciate it more than I can tell you."

The pressure of her fingers tightened for an instant and made the blood course through my veins until my whole body tingled and my breath seemed to catch in my throat. I mumbled a commonplace reply, and pulled myself together with an effort in order to avoid making my exit like a boy in his 'teens.

Before I reached my office, however, I had convinced myself that Miss Carney's behavior was due only to her simple, unaffected, generosity or disposition, coupled with her delight at returning home, and that I was no more than a conceited ass in attaching any other significance to it.

CHAPTER XV.

A New Victim.

"Good morning, Mr. Ware!" exclaimed Miss Carney, as I made a somewhat tardy appearance at the breakfast table not long after my arraival at Carney-Croft in acceptance of Mrs. Randolph's invitation. "What report has the bold Nimrod to-day? Are we to have game for dinner to-morrow, sir?"

"Not so much as the report of a gun," I replied, as I dropped into my seat. "I only flushed one bird and he flew straight into foliage so dense that I couldn't get a ghost of a sight on him—"

"We don't mind, so long as we don't get a sight of a ghost some dark night, do we, Nan?" laughed Miss Carney. "Besides, I've ordered some partridges from town and we won't be disappointed in our dinner, either! You should be very grateful to me for saving the day for you, sir!"

"You might save my reputation, too, if you would only remark casually, as the game is served, that I have been out shooting every morning since I came," I suggested with a smile. "I believe you are to have guests to-morrow."

"Yes," she returned with provoking gravity, "but it's to be the rector and his wife. I would do a great deal for you, as you know, but in such highly moral company you are asking too much!"

"Speaking of ghosts, Mr. Ware," said Miss Weston, whose assumption of interest and good spirits was scarcely in keeping with her wanly glistening eyes and the pale, emaciated, hectic expression of her face, "you seem to have these Carney-Croft wraiths most decidedly under your control. You have laid them, in a word, haven't you?"

"There certainly have been no uncanny doings since we've been here," cried Miss Carney in a bantering tone. "I don't really believe that Mr. Ware ever laid a ghost in his life, my dear. He has just been trying to tease us all the time!"

"I think Dr. MacArdel had more to do with it than I," I replied gravely. "He engineered the whole campaign against them and is entitled to all the credit of putting an end to their performances."

"Did you say that a woman was the leading spirit in all this mysterious affair?" asked Miss Weston, with interest.

I saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised, and sent to Randolph's pharmacy for a supply. They seemed to take effect at once and soon after I began using them, my head got better, and the pain and stiffness left my limbs and joints. I heartily recommend Doan's Kidney Pills for such troubles as mine."

West Ends Defeat Old Rivals.

The West Ends, of Somerville, won their first game of the season on Thursday afternoon at the county seat before a record-breaking crowd, defeating the old-time rivals, the Garwoods, by the score of 7 to 4. The home team swatted the ball to all corners of the lot and the score does not begin to show the heavy stick work. Torpey, who has left the Allentown team, was home and covered first base for the West Ends in a brilliant manner and his stick work was a feature. Braden, the local slab artist, disposed of the batsmen rather easily. He fanned an even dozen. Features of the contest were two-base hits by Torpey and "Johnnie" Enright. The score by innings:

Rich Men's Horses Lose.

New York, June 1.—"All men are equal on the turf and under the turf." This quotation came home to many with great force at Belmont Park yesterday, when they saw three fillies owned by multi-millionaires finish behind Yankee Girl in the most famous of all the three-year-old filly stakes run in America, the Ladies' Stakes, which was first decided in 1868 at old Jerome Park. Yankee Girl is the property of Charles R. Ellison, a Western turfman of modest antecedents, who for many years was the closest friend that the successful jockey of a few years ago, "Tommy" Burns, ever had, and both of them made fortune under the shrewd advice which Ellison gave Burns and which the latter followed with much benefit. But Ellison has continued to prosper even without the co-operation of Burns and he has fairly earned his cognomen of "Lucky Charley." He is one of the most fearless bettors who ever came to the East.

The new and highly effective water-cooling system, with honeycomb radiator, is one of the features that give this motor an actual ability far in excess of its nominal rating, while the full elliptic springs, with the Premier slow recoil shock absorbing heads, make this ability enjoyable by genuine easy-riding under the most trying conditions.

Every part of Premier construction has the solidness and strength due to expert direction and careful workmanship. The upholstery and fittings are of the most modern and luxurious type. NEW SYSTEM OF BUILDING.

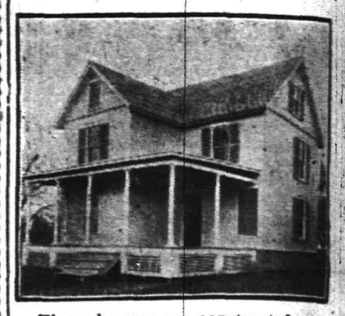
A MARVEL IN THE SCIENCE OF CONSTRUCTION.

A method far in advance of anything formerly used in the preparation of the different parts of a house when erected in sections, making it easy to construct any design of a house, and a very superior house for all seasons, countries and climates at a great reduction in cost.



These houses are constructed principally from the best kiln dried lumber in a factory entirely protected from weather, where best high speed woodworking machines are used for cutting and shaping of every piece, reducing cost for mechanics fully one-half, making a superior house when finished.

Houses or other structures erected under this system make the warmest houses in winter, and the strongest building that can be constructed with any material, the fiercest storm fails to cause any vibration whatever. They are adapted to receive all improvements, plumbing, lighting, heating, etc., when desired.

A new method of lath and plaster is used for interior finish, making a perfect indestructable wall superior to anything ever before used.

LOCAL GOLFERS BUSY

Large Fields Out Saturday Despite the Raw and Chilly Weather.

HONORS AT THE P. C. C.

H. D. Hibbard Gets First Points for Golf Committee Cup—T. Earl Stockton Second.

Despite the raw and chilly weather on Saturday there was a large field out at the Plainfield Country Club to engage in the competition for the several events scheduled and low scores were the rule. Several new faces were seen on the course, showing that the game is becoming more popular than ever. There were the usual social features at the clubhouse, the serving of tea and dinners and altogether the day was one of pleasure for all who visited the club.

Henry D. Hibbard won the first honors for the Golf committee cup, T. Earl Stockton finished second, while W. Lester Glenney, Leighton Calkins, Julius E. Erickson and Edward J. Patterson tied for third place. The scores:

Henry D. Hibbard, 81, 6—75; T. Earl Stockton, 86, 8—78; W. Lester Glenney, 80, 0—80; Leighton Calkins, 84, 0—84; Julius E. Erickson, 92, 12—80; Edward J. Patterson, 94, 14—80; Frank O. Reinhart, 83, 0—83; Howard G. Lapsley, 93, 10—83; C. B. Morgan, 86, 2—84.

G. F. Earl won first honors for the Green committee cup with a net score of 76, while J. R. Evans finished second and Hugh F. Fox third. The scores:

W. Lester Glenney won the first leg on the Scratch cup, to be played for every Saturday from June 1 to August 24, inclusive, excepting June 15. He returned a gross score of 80. The other scores:

Henry D. Hibbard, 81; Frank O. Reinhart, 83; C. B. Morgan, 86; Herbert S. Rogers, 91; Howard G. Lapsley, 93; Edward J. Patterson, 94.

There was also the qualifying round for the June cup, the conditions being that those returning the four lowest net scores in Classes A and B shall compete next Saturday in the first round match play. It happened that on Saturday in Class A there were four players who were tied with a score of 80 and this will have to be played off before the fourth man can qqalify. In Class B there were two contestants who were tied with a net score of 84. This will also have to be played off before the first round is played. The scores returned are as follows:

Class A—Henry D. Hibbard, 81, 16—75; T. Earl Stockton, 86, 8—78; Herbert S. Rogers, 91, 13—78; Leighton Calkins, 84, 4—80; Julius E. Erickson, 92, 12—80; Edward J. Patterson, 94, 14—80; W. Lester Glenney, 80, 0—80.

There was an unusually large field out at the Park Golf Club, Saturday afternoon, when the events on the course included the weekly play for the President's and Golf Club cups and the monthly competition for the Hydewood Park cup. There were also social features at the clubhouse, tea being served during the afternoon.

Charles W. McCutchen scored five points for the Hydewood Park cup and won first honors for the President's cup. Rev. Joseph O. McKelvey won first honors for the Golf Club cup, scratch competition. These scores were returned:

Sixty of the thoroughbreds shown at the Philadelphia Horse Show arrived here by special train last night and today were taken to the local horse show grounds, where they will be gotten ready for the show the last of the week.

COMMUNION AT CHURCHES.

New Members Received in Various Congregations Yesterday.

Communion services were held in several local churches yesterday morning and despite the stormy weither the attendance was good. At Trinity Reformed church, Rev. Dr. E. P. Johnson, acting pastor, received one on confession from the Junior department of the Sunday-school, and two by letter.

Those received by Rev. A. C. McCrea at the First M. E. church are as follows: The Misses Alice Higgins, Alice Martin, Amelia Geier, Laura Warnock, Anna Warnock, Lillian Wyckoff, Edna Mosher, Irene Doane, Nellie Creager, Mrs. W. W. Warnock, Mrs. E. H. Deakyne, Mrs. Catherine Mackay and James Lindsey, W. G. Mackay, Ray Lyman and Burnett Doane.

Three new members were received by letter at Faith chapel by Rev. J. W. Musson, pastor. There were no accessions at the Park Avenue Baptist church or Warren chapel.

NEW PICTURES FOR THIRD WEEK AT THEATRE.

The third week of Manager Counihan's "continuous" moving picture and illustrated song show will begin at the New Plainfield theatre this afternoon. All new films will be shown and as a special offering, two of the newest and best subjects Archie Shepard has ever secured, will be shown.

New songs will be rendered by Frank J. Hapgood, the silver tenor, who was with Gorton's minstrels last season.

Water Wagon Racing.

James Burke, driver of No. 1 watering cart, took his sprinkler to the steeplechase meet Saturday to lay the dust between the races. He sprinkled his throat a bit between whiles, and when he started for home he allowed his horses to go in a manner reminiscent of a close finish at the track. L. B. Harris, driving back from the races, called Roundsman Higgins' attention to Burke, and the officer placed him under arrest. Mr. Harris said he didn't want to press a charge in the city court this morning, and Judge Runyon released Burke with a warning to curb his racing tendencies when on the quarter deck of the water wagon.

"BOOKIE" BEAT BETTORS OUT OF THEIR WINNINGS

LEFT BEFORE THEY HAD A CHANCE TO CASH IN ON LAST RACE.

Though four out of five New York book-makers who operated at the Driving Park, Saturday, in connection with the Watchung Hunt races, finished well ahead of the bettors, the other one got much the worse on the odds. He played a losing game from the start and stood to drop the greater part of his dwindling roll when the last race was over but he took time by the forelock and quitted the grounds without taking the trouble to notify anyone of the fact. When "Adjutor" romped home an easy winner at odds of 2 to 5 there was a rush to cash in but Bookie No. 5 was half way to the North Avenue station. A saddened lot of Plainfielders with betting slips took up the trail but he beat them to the train by five furlongs.

The other book-makers won heavily on two of the races, the favorites being backed with big rolls but they failed to land more than place. The betting was feverish at times,, the women in the grandstand even taking a hand in it and staking from one to fifty dollars on their choice.

The book-makers were not disturbed in their transactions and several hysterical citizens have since taken time away from their offices to tell about it. The track is located in Middlesex county and is under the jurisdiction of the New Brunswick authorities.

PLAINFIELD MIXED DOUBLES.

Good Matches on Country Club Courts in Annual Tournament.

Play in mixed doubles was started Saturday on the courts of the Plainfield Country Club, and two teams were selected for the final round of the lawn tennis tournament which is to be played next Saturday. Miss Edna Wildey and Wylie Brown will meet Miss Mildred Wildey and Willard Wadsworth in that contest. The summary:

Plainfield Country Club. Mixed doubles—First round—Miss Sarah E. Schuyler and H. J. Cochran defeated Miss Barbara Fleming and T. M. Day, 6—3, 8—6; Miss Mildred Wildey and Willard Wadsworth defeated Miss C. O. P. Campbell and C. L. Campbell, 6—1, 6—1; Miss Edna Wildey and Wylie Brown defeated Mrs. F. S. Weaver and H. L. McGee, 6—2, 6—2; Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Lockwood defeated Miss Janet Wildey and M. J. Beaumont, 8—10, 6—3, 7—5.

Second round—Miss Mildred Wildey and Willard Wadsworth defeated Miss Sarah E. Schuyler and H. J. Cochran, 2—6, 6—3, 6—4; Miss Edna Wildey and Wylie Brown defeated Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Lockwood, 6—1, 6—2.

WHITTAKER DEAD.

Succumbed to His Bullet Wound at Muhlenberg Hospital.

Fred Stevens Whittaker, who shot himself in a fit of despondency in the presence of his foster-father, Robert Whittaker, the horse trainer, on Decoration Day, died at Muhlenberg Hospital Saturday afternoon. He did not regain consciousness.

The body was taken to the undertaking rooms of A. M. Runyon & Son, Park avenue, where funeral service will be held this afternoon, at 4 o'clock. Rev. E. M. Rodman, rector-emeritus of Grace Protestant Episcopal church, will conduct it. The burial will be at Hillside cemetery.

No light has been shed on the history of the young man. No word has been sent to Eton, where he had said he was born, and there is a tendency to let Whittaker's early life remain, as he appeared to want it to be, a mystery.

Musical Club Entertained.

The members and friends of the Musical Club, of Plainfield, to the number of fifty, enjoyed the last musical of the season, Saturday night, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Fleming, on Park avenue. The entire program was given by Julian Walker, the well-known baritone, of New York, and he delighted the audience with his singing. The program consisted of ten numbers, and a pleasing feature was the work of Joseph McIntyre, who was the accompanist of the evening. Mr. Walker will be remembered as one of the artists who appeared last winter at Mr. McIntyre's chamber music concerts at the Casino.

An Invitation.

Friends of the Children's Home are cordially invited to attend the annual reception on Wednesday, June 5, from 3 to 5 p. m. Take Somerset street trolley to Jackson avenue, and walk two blocks east, to Westervelt avenue.

"Here's to our old friends,
Here's to our new friends,
May the new grow to be old,
And the old, ne'er grow to be new."

WATCHUNG RACES ENDED

Final Six Events Not as Snappy as Those on Memorial Day Card.

"DIANA" WINS FEATURE

Frightened Horse in Farmers' Event Leaves Track and Injures a Groom.

Though none of the races were as hotly contested or as prettily finished as those on Decoration Day, the final card of the Watchung Hunt Club's fourth annual steeplechase at the Driving Park, Saturday, furnished plenty of excitement for the big crowd which turned out. The villainous and unseasonable chill that filled the air seemed to have effect on both men and horses and the going lacked the snap that was apparent Thursday.

There were six events on the list and the feature proved to be a steeplechase of three miles for the Somerset cup. It was won by Malcolm Stevenson's "Diana" against a field of eight, with Charles Freeman's "Strongheart" second, Charles Pfizer's "Ninnette" third and Charles W. Fisk's "Applejack" fourth. "Strongheart" and "Applejack" were favorites at the start and the bettors about the track plunged heavily on them at odds of 1 to 2. The bookmakers offered 3 to 2 on "Diana" and got but few takers.

In this event, Louis Batjer, of Elizabeth, who finished first on Thursday with "Tobosso" in one of the prettiest races ever seen at the track, suffered a bad fall at the liverpool jump. He landed on his shoulders but rolled clear of his mount and pluckily got back in the saddle. He was cheered lustily every time he passed the stand.

Batjer again ran in hard luck in the sixth and final race in which there were but three starters; Batjer on his "Tobosso," "Jimmie" O'Brien on Singleton Van Schaick's "Adjutor" and Marshall Clapp on Leonce Fuller's "Cricket." It was a steeplechase of three miles for the Oak Tree cup and promised some good sport. "Adjutor" was the favorite at 2 to 5 but though all three horses got away together nicely he dropped back at the first jump. "Tobosso" and "Cricket" were neck-and-neck at the in-and-out but in taking the second fence, both horses collided. Clapp was thrown from his saddle and Batjer got his reins and bridle in such a mix-up that he was unable to guide his animal. O'Brien took both fences safely and before the other riders could get in shape he had left them a couple of furlongs behind. Clapp and Batjer both stuck to the race, however, and overcame about half of the lead; Clapp finishing second and Batjer third.

A farmer's race was again on the card and a tinge of excitement that came near being a bad accident was added to it. There were eight starters and one of the leaders was David Hand's "Nancy Switchem," ridden by Charles Smith, a Netherwood "Fresh Air" boy known as "Banty Dipper." The first time around "Nancy Switchem" was badly frightened by the yelling from the grandstand and the thunder of hoofs behind her and she attempted to leave the track at the paddock entrance. She missed the opening by ten feet and crashed into a section of the fence on which several men were seated. One of them was Edward Haydon, a groom employed by Singleton Van Schaick, and though he made a frantic effort to get out of the way, the horse struck him. He was knocked senseless but when revived later was found to have escaped with a broken nose. "Nancy Switchem" fell down and "Banty Dipper" was thrown over her head. The boy cried lustily when picked up but he afterward said it was because he lost the race and not from injury or fright.

In the second race, a steeplechase for the Master's cup, R. R. Howard's "Boo Ba" threw his rider, Fred Alpers, and swerved from the course into a nearby field. It ran all the way to the back of the grandstand before being captured. The race was easily won by W. H. Wildey's "Silver Twist."

The summary:

First race—For Galloways; five furlongs on the flat for the Westfield cup: Won by "The Lad," E. C. Cowdin, 2d., Cedarhurst, L. I.; second, "Spring Beauty," Singleton Van Schaick, Huntington, L. PHILADELPHIAN WEDS MISS MADELINE ROBINSON

CEREMONY AT SCOTCH PLAINS BAPTIST CHURCH WITNESSED BY MANY FRIENDS

The Scotch Plains Baptist church was the scene of a brilliant wedding Saturday evening, when Miss Madeline Robinson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Proul Robinson, became the wife of Richard William Tull, of Philadelphia. The church was decorated with huge boughs of dogwood and white iris.

The ceremony took place at 6.30 o'clock, when to the strains of the Lohengrin Wedding March, the bridal party entered the church. The bride escorted by her father, who gave her in marriage, was preceded by Messrs. Pickering, Bailey, Wales, of Philadelphia, and Messrs. White and Darling, of New York, as ushers and the Misses Urner, Bradley, Kyte and Tull as bridesmaids and Miss Lillian Fancher, as maid-of-honor. At the chancel the party was met by the groom and his best man, Dr. Lloyd D. Bickley, of Philadelphia, and the Rev. Dr. Mulford, rector of All Saints' church, of Fanwood, who performed the ceremony.

The bride, an attractive brunette, was gowned in white chiffon over white satin, trimmed with duchess lace and carried a bouquet of bride roses and lilies-of-the-valley. She wore a long tulle veil caught with a spray of orange blossoms. The bridesmaids' gowns were white silk muslin with pink flowers over white and empire girdles and sashes of pink satin ribbon. Small garlands of tiny pink roses and smilax were worn in their hair and they carried bouquets of pink sweet peas. The maid-of-honor was similarly gowned, but carried a bouquet of bridesmaid roses tied with pink ribbon.

Following the wedding a reception was held at the bride's residence in Fanwood. The house was attractively decorated, palms, dogwood, and chestnut blossoms being used in the reception hall, music room and parlor, while in the dining room bridesmaid roses were used. Davis, of Newark, furnished the supper and during the evening there was a fine program of music by an orchestra.

There were a great many out-of-town guests, as Mr. and Mrs. Robinson formerly resided in Brooklyn. A special car from Philadelphia brought many relatives and friends of Mr. Tull. The couple, who were the recipients of many handsome and useful gifts, left amid a shower of confetti and the proverbial old shoe for good luck, while the orchestra played "Dearie." The honeymoon will extend over a month, being spent at the Jamestown Exposition and points in Canada. Upon their return they will reside in Fanwood.

The revised lists have been filed by the teams of the Inter-City Baseball League. Four changes were made by the Dunellens, the new names being Herman, J. Conway, C. Apgar, G. Taylor. Scotch Plains filed the names of George Allen, Harry Flannery, and F. Voness. The Clinton Avenue management put in the names of J. Scott, J. Murphy, and H. Giles. The only addition to the Y. M. C. A. list is W. Glenney, a utility player. Bound Brook filed no changes.

Next Saturday games will be played between Scotch Plains and Clinton Avenue at Crescent Oval, and Dunellen and Bound Brook, at Bound Brook. The Y. M. C. A. nine will play a practice game on Hope common.

Moisty Trolley Trip.

Hugh O'Mara, a blacksmith's helper at the Baldwin Locomotive Works, Philadelphia, started from the Quaker City Saturday to travel to New York by trolley. He had a few drinks in Philadelphia, and he stopped off at Trenton to get a few more. He left the car here to add to the load, and Patrolman Charles Flynn found him drifting about the trolley station on Watchung avenue. In the city court this morning, Hugh was penitent and full of good resolutions, and Judge Runyon suspended sentence.

Funeral of Miss Elsie M. Toms.

ROBERT A. PERINE DIES SUDDENLY IN NEW YORK

STRICKEN BY HEART DISEASE AS HE WAS RETURNING TO THIS CITY.

Robert A. Perine, aged sixty-two years, of 633 Belvidere avenue, died suddenly of heart disease, last night, at the home of his son, W. N. B. Perine, at the Hotel LaMarquise, East Thirty-first street, New York. He left his home in the morning for New York to take dinner with his son. About 10 o'clock he and the son walked over to Sixth street and Thirty-first street to get a cab to the ferry. As they were about to enter the cab the elder Mr. Perine staggered and fell into the arms of the cabman. He was hurried back to the hotel. Dr. H. J. Schwarz was summoned, but Mr. Perine was dead before he reached the hotel.

Mr. Perine was for many years superintendent of the American Bank Note Company, and he was a resident of Brooklyn, prior to moving to Plainfield a year ago last October. He and Mrs. Perine changed their residence to live with their daughter, Mr. H. C. Deknatel, at 633 Belvidere avenue. He lived in retirement and was enjoying the best of health here. Both Mr. Perine and his wife were identified with the Congregational church in Brooklyn.

Besides a wife, he is survived by two children, W. N. B. Perine, of New York, and Mrs. H. C. Deknatel, of this city. The remains will be brought to Plainfield today and the funeral services will be held from the late home tomorrow. Interment will be in Hillside cemetery.

GOVERNOR SIGNS THE TRAVELLING LIBRARY BILL.

Books Will Hereafter Be Extended to the Penal Institutions of the State.

Governor Stokes has signed the bill which was introduced at the last session of the Legislature, providing for the extension of the State travelling library to the penal and correctional institutions of New Jersey. The bill calls for an appropriation of $1,000 to carry on this work, and as a result the State is the first one in the country to provide for this extension.

Miss Emma Adams, librarian at the Plainfield Public Library; Mrs. Dexter Tiffany, Dr. Henry M. Maxson and James P. Murray were appointed as a committee by the State Charities Aid Association to look after the interests of the bill, and it was largely through the efforts of State Senator Ernest R. Ackerman that the bill was passed and the Governor was led to sign it.

A "BAKE SHOP" SALE.

Affair Held By First M. E. Juniors Netted $14.

The Junior Epworth League of the First M. E. church, under the direction of Mrs. Thomas MacDonald, superintendent, held a successful "bake shop" sale in Vincent chapel, Saturday, in closing the season's activities. The affair was held for the benefit of the Netherwood Fresh Air Home and the net profits were $14.

The chapel was attractively decorated with American flags and the Epworth League emblems. Lemonade, cake, candy, cookies and pies were offered for sale and the entire supply was sold out. Those at the cake table were Helen Joy, Irene Doane, Marguerite Thorn and Harold Seal. Those who presided at the candy table were Thyra Stiles, Russell Beekman, Carol Dunavan, Ruth Lynn and Ruth Seal and those at the table where cookies and pies were sold were Anna Warnock, Laura Warnock, Alice Joy, and Ida May Butler. At the lemonade table were Ceta Boice, Lucille Hewitt, Roberta Templin, Ruth Enander, and Muriel Coursier.

Lamb Going Up.

The butchers report a slight advance in the price of lamb. The management of the Union Beef Company said this morning that the advance was almost too little to note, and that there was no particular reason for it that they could think of. The advance would not affect the retail buyers, it was said.

Organize Double Quartette.

Percy Abbott, of Dunellen, has organized a double quartette among the members of the Dunellen A. C. Mr. Abbott is leader and the other singers are Frank Fletcher, Jr., John Logan, John Campbell, Frank Rinehart, George Apgar, Harry Ising and Ruliff Fisher.

READY FOR THE CARNIVAL

Knights of Columbus Will Open Their Big Show This Evening.

COMPANY IS PREPARING

Arrived On the Grounds This Morning—Contest For Most Popular Salesgirl, With Exposition Trip As Prize.

The carnival of the Knights of Columbus will open on the field at Grant avenue and Front street tonight. It will run up to and including Saturday night. The carnival company reached the grounds this morning, and the employes are busily engaged in getting ready for the opening. Everything will be in shape for the coming of the visitors tonight. The westbound main line trolley cars will pass the door.

The carnival will open at 7 o'clock. There will be a one-ring circus, and all the usual attractions of a carnival nature, including mechanial amusements, devices of various kinds and shows of diverse nature. The shows, it is promised, will number twenty-five in all.

A great feature of the carnival will be a voting contest for the most popular salesgirl in the city. The telephone girls are eligible in this contest. Voting will go on every night, and the results will be made known from day to day. The prize will be a trip to the Jamestown Exposition, with every expense paid. The Cooks' agency will have charge of the tour, thus assuring the prize-winner of a most desirable trip.

Conway's trained mules will be shown with the circus. These mules have been quartered in this city for several months, and Mr. Conway is well known about town. Two free shows will be shown every night at 7:30 o'clock and 10:30 o'clock. In these, "Zarro" will do a thrilling high air act with a bicycle, and Eddie Martyne, a noted aerialist, will do a thrilling act on a slack wire.

TWO BLUES FOR "CZAR."

Miss Hooley's Horse Bested Big Field at Philadelphia Show.

Miss Mabel Hooley's handsome stepping thoroughbred saddle horse, "Czar," made a splendid record for himself at the Philadelphia horse show Saturday. Against a big field of the very finest horses in the country he captured the blue ribbon in two classes, the judges having no hesitancy in awarding them. The classes were the heavyweight saddle and the large saddle. Among the horses which were defeated by "Czar" are Stanton Elliott's "Judge Cantrell" and the celebrated mare, "Jasmine."

Miss Hooley has entered "Czar" and five other horses in the Plainfield show and after her Philadelphia triumph she is certain to make a great showing. Her animals are all blue ribboners and at the present time ar in "the pink of condition."

Wanted Her Husband Changed.

Joseph Doyle of West Third street, was arrested Saturday on complaint of his wife, who charged him with drunkenness and disorder. In the city court this morning, Mrs. Doyle said her husband was a good man when sober, and she didn't want him punished. She only wanted him made sober. Judge Runyon said he couldn't engage to change a man on short notice, and he didn't have much faith in jail as a factor in making a man more considerate of his wife's desires. Sentence was suspended.

Council Will Have Busy Session.

The June meeting of the Common Council will be held tonight when a number of matters of importance will be considered, including the ordinance to pave the streets with brick, which will come up on third and final reading. The Council will probably advertise for bids for this work, as well as for macadamizing certain streets. Another matter of importance will be the advertising for bids for the Plainfield avenue storm sewer which is to be undertaken this summer.

Sixty Days In Jail.

For the fourth time this year, Sheridan Jones, colored, was arraigned before Judge Runyon in the city court this morning, charged with drunkenness. He wanted to take the pledge for two years, but Judge Runyon told him to ask Warden Dodd, at the county jail, to administer it. "You are going to Elizabeth for sixty days," said the magistrate.

Quietly Wedded.

Miss Augusta C. Renwanz and Leo E. Goris, both of this city, were quietly married Saturday evening by the Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, 927 Central avenue. The wedding party included Mr. and Mrs. Romand, of Clinton avenue, and near friends of the bride and groom. The couple will reside in this city.

One of our clients owed $48 between four people. His salary is $14 weekly; rent $12 monthly. 'PLAINS AND FANWOOD.

It may have been the cold weather that did nit, bu the 'Plains team was defeated by the All Stars, of Newark, in the game at the 'Plains Saturday afternoon, the score being 5 to 3 in favor of the visitors. Hewit, who pitched the game for the locals, started to do the box work, but had to be relieved by Frentz, who has also been out of the game for two weeks with the same trouble. However, with proper support he should have won his game. Two errors, in the outfield together with a wild throw netted the visitors four of their runs and practically lost the game. Following is the lineup and score by innings:

All Stars—Merklin, 2b; Gerwin, cf; Kuhn, ss; Pheifer, cf; Abel, s; Silkey, rf; Garland, 3b; Stoutenberg, 1b; Miller, p.

'Plains—Baldwin, ss; Alberts, c; Allen, 1b; G. Frentz, 2b; Jacot, cf; Schreinbeck, 3b; Reick, lf; Eller, rf; Hewitt, A. Frentz, p.

George Allen played his first regular game with the locals Saturday afternoon. The yearning for his first love, Scotch Plains, was too strong for George and on Friday night the Y. M. C. A. team relinquished all rights to him and he joined the local team at once. George made his initial bow as a regular by knocking a clean three bagger the first time up. His reliable work with the willow will be an encouraging incentive for the balance of the team.

Manager Frentz now has as strong a batting lineup as any team in the league. With the advent of warm weather Frentz and Hewitt's pitching arms should come around all right. When they do the balance of the team in the league want to look out for Scotch Plains.

Tomorrow the local Baptist church will entertain the East New Jersey Baptist Association at its sixty-sixth annual meeting. The public is invited to attend the services. Morning at 10 a. m., afternoon at 2, and evening at 7:30.

The storm of yesterday interfered with the usual attendance at the Sunday church service, but few venturing out. At the Baptist church the monthly communion was held at the close of the morning sermon.

Well, it looks as though Dog Corners will be "dry" for a year at least. What will the residents do without a hotel and the usual summer odor from Glazer's fat factory? It won't seem like the old town at all.

Charles Olsen, who was committed to the county jail by Justice of the Peace Joseph Clark in default of $200 bail, has been released, a friend from Plainfield putting up the necessary bonds Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Grant were the guests over Sunday of Mrs. Grant's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas M. Paff, Sr.

The weekly B. P. Y. U. meeting, held last night in the parlors of the church, was in charge of Edward Johnston.

KISSES.

To W. T.

Kisses are made for human folk
And sighs for tearful women,
And hugs are made for healthy men
And ducks ara made for swimming.

So everywhere on land or sea
The question is how many?
The guilty sin of wishing it,
The trouble in getting any.

The kiss of the mother like dew of a rose,
The sigh of a lass for her lover,
His kiss like the sun on the wheat and grass
And her's like the sweet scented clover.

The kiss that you give the kiss as you part,
The compact of faith in your breath,
The kiss of joy the kiss of farewell,
The renunciation and of death.

E. L. M. BRISTOL.

NEW NECKWEAR.

There is a perfect craze for embroidered linen collars, the natural and attractive accessory of the tailored shirt waist. There are scores and scores of little bow ties, brought out especially for these linen collars. Embroidered bows, lace, lawn, silk in all colors are neatly made and give a jaunty touch to the neck. The bow must match the color of the the dress, for the leading tendency this spring is to have the entire outfit of one color, unless varied with a white waist. The combination of brown and gray seems almost impossible, yet is one of the color schemes which grows apart from the one tone outfit.

CHRISTIAN FIELD.

Baptism of children will be a feature of the Children's Day exercises at the First M. E. church on Sunday.

If you want to really enjoy yourself attend the strawberry and ice cream festival at Trinity Reformed church, Thursday and Friday nights, under the auspices of the Ladies' Christian Work Society and Young Women's Mission Band. There will be an abundance of fine strawberries and good ice cream.

Children's Day exercises will be held Sunday morning at the Park Avenue Baptist church at 10:30, in place of the regular preaching service. DON'T NEED A SPECIAL DELIVERY AFTER JULY 1.

Under New Post Office Rule Value in Stamps When Marked Will Suffice.

The postal law relating to special delivery letters has been changed by a special order received by Postmaster Bird today from the Postoffice Department at Washington.

The order is No. 340 and gives the new law concerning this class of mail matters. It states "that from and after July 1, 1907, when in addition to stamps required to transmit any letter or package of mail matter through the mails there shall be attached to the nevelope or covering 10 cents' worth of ordinary stamps of any denomination with the words 'special delivery,' or their equivalent, written or printed on the envelope or covering, under such regulation handled, transmitted and delivered as the Postmaster-General may prescribe, the said package shall be in all respects as though it bore a regulation 'special delivery' stamp."

In speaking of the new law today Mr. Bird said: "It is of vital importance to bear in mind that mail bearing ten cents in stamps, in addition to the regular postage, must be marked 'special delivery' or otherwise it will be treated as ordinary mail, unless where a return is on such matter. When a return address is put on, it will be registered and thereby delayed in transit as well as failing to be specially delivered at the office of destination."

DIDN'T LIKE THE LEMON.

Umpire Chastised Boy He Thought Threw It at Him.

Umpire Andrew Dreux, of the Bloomfield baseball team, has no admiration for lemons, at least when the real article is handed out to him, which was the case Thursday, when a boy on the bleachers threw one at him.

This angered Dreux, who dropped his mask, made a bee-line for the bleachers and seized Eddie Garlock, twelve years old. He punished the lad so severely that he was unable to go to school yesterday.

The parents of the boy have sworn out a warrant for Dreux's arrest on a charge of assault and battery. The boy denies that he handed the lemon to his assailant.

No More Union Beer.

Chicago, Ill., June 3.—The last barrel of "union" beer in Chicago and the whole country, according to an edict of the American Federation of Labor, was manufactured Friday. At midnight the Brewery Workers' Union ceased to exist in the eyes of the national labor leaders, and the two million organized workingmen in the United States will be asked to get on the "water wagon" or use some other kind of beverage. The brewery employes have rebelled against President Gompers and the National Labor Executive Council, and they are to be disciplined. The method adopted is that of expulsion. Secretary Kemper, of the local union, said the 3,000 brewery workers in Chicago will go on brewing beer whether the American Federation of Labor regards it officially as a "union" product or not.

China to be Aggressive.

Washington, D. C., June 3.—Sir Chentung Liang Cheng's departure next month from the post of Chinese minister at Washington to become a vice-president of the Chinese Board of Foreign Affairs at Pekin means the beginning of a firmer foreign policy on the part of China and an assertion of Chinese authority in Manchuria. The significance of the promotion of the minister has been little appreciated in this country. The importance of the change is heightened by the fact that Wang Tah Sieh, the Chinese minister at London, has also been recalled to take the other vice presidency. These two officials are among the most progressive in the Chinese government, and their influence has always been cast in favor of China's asserting its vast latent strength to command respect in the Far East.

$1,000,000 for Her Devotion.

Los Angeles, Cal., June 3.—"I promised my dying sister I would be married to her husband and become a mother to her seven children. I have kept my promise and never regretted it. For seventeen years I have been a happy mother to them." These words were spoken by Mrs. Maria K. Ena, who inherits a $1,000,000 estate in Honolulu and who appeared in the Probate Court when the case to appoint an administrator for the estate of her late husband, John Ena, at Long Beach, was heard. Mr. Ena was nearly twenty-six years older than his wife when he died last year.

Six Rescue 350 Pound Man.

New York, June 3.—Six policemen were needed to carry Michael Klein, an invalid, weighing 350 pounds, down three flights of stairs when fire started in the house at No. 551 Fifth avenue yesterday afternoon. Shortly after a blaze on the first floor was discovered Policeman O'Brien, of the Fifth avenue station, was informed that there was a man on the third floor. O'Brien ran up the stairs, but when he saw Klein's size he called the reserves. Then, with five other policemen, he helped carried the invalid down through the smoke and flames to the street.

Road Drops 900 Men.

New York, June 3.—Orders were issued by the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Saturday laying off between nine hundred and one thousand men on the system between New York and Buffalo. The order will go into effect today and will affect laborers, clerks, switchmen and many other employes. It was explained last night that the wholesale "lay off" is the usual one which takes place every summer.

"Knocks Down" 378 Nickels.

New York, June 3.—Another new way to make money is credited to James E. Lewis. He was arrested recently on a charge of robbing a Bowery person, but was discharged. In his pocket the police found a B. R. T. conductor's badge, No. 1,449, owned by James Wall, who collects nickels on the Brooklyn cars. Wall's home was robbed on May 11 and his badge and uniform were stolen. Now the amazing charge is made that Lewis reported to the car barns the next day, and the starter, not noticing the strange face, let him take out Wall's car. Lewis collected $18.90 in fares and quit. He was turned over to Lieutenant O'Connor to be escorted to Brooklyn to explain.

Miss Jennie Anderson, of Somerville, who has been spending a few days in town, has returned home.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

GOLF.

The first round play for the June cup will be included in the events at the Plainfield Country Club on Saturday for those who qualified last Saturday.

The dinner-dances will be the attractions at the Plainfield Country Club on Saturdays in June and July. Last season they were exceedingly popular and are sure to be equally so this summer.

While Frank O. Reinhart has been playing good golf, he is not up to his usual high standard when he took part in the championship tournaments a year or two ago. However, he is playing a consistent game, considering the fact that he only visits the links about once a week.

R. H. Cox is among the members of the Plainfield Country Club who is steadily improving his game. He with a number of others will soon be found in the Class A division.

According to the officials of the Metropolitan Golf Association there is going to be "something doing" in enforcing the stringent rules of the association. There have been rumors of some lively capers among the younger golfers at tournaments this season, and the officials are determined that it shall be stopped. If necessary the members will be suspended or dropped to accomplish the purpose. It is realized that for the best interests of the game such gross infractions of the rules cannot be allowed to continue. There are only a few golfers who have been guilty of misconduct and it is believed that a thorough discipline will be of great benefit to the other members.

The amateur championship tournament of the Massachusetts State Golf Association will be held on June 17, 18, 19 and 20 over the links of the Woodlawn Golf Club. There will be an eighteen hole medal play qualification round, the best thirty-two to continue on at match play in eighteen hole contests, save the final, which will be at thirty-six holes.

A team contest will also be decided in conjunction with the qualifying round. The five members entered from one club making the best aggregate score will receive the bronze medal of the association. The name of the winning club and names of the members will be engraved on the Windeler shield. This shield will be held by the successful team for one year.

The new year book of the United States Golf Association contains a list of forty-three associate club members and 239 allied clubs. It has been estimated that this numerical strength represents a membership of 746,000 persons and an aggregate holding in real estate and other property of more than $10,000,000.

DIAMOND DUST.

George Allen has joined the forces of the Scotch Plains team, leaving Y. M. C. A. without his services as a first baseman. Allen told the association officials that in case the 'Plains had a team in the league he would play with them and if they entered his name it would be with that understanding. Hereafter he will play with the 'Plains team.

The chances are, however, that Marsh, formerly of Scotch Plains, but now of the borough, may play the initial sack for Y. M. C. A. He is a fast man on the field and good with the stick.

Y. M. C. A. had to be without Nelson's service Saturday, because the Rutgers College team had a game on. Tracy Howard filled the position.

When Y. M. C. A. and Clinton Avenue meet again they will probably put up a far better exhibition than they did last week. For the sake of the sport it is to be hoped that they will devote more time to practice.

Did you ever notice how Brit. Martin comes along with a timely two bagger just when it is needed the most. He is without doubt one of the best stickers in the league.

Gilman, of the Clinton Avenues, is no doubt affected somewhat in his batting by recent eye trouble, and within a short time should be able to do good work with the willow.

Giles, the short stop on Clinton Avenue, is making an enviable reputation these days. Nothing seems to be too swift for him and when it comes to hitting them out he can do that too.

Harney, the boxman for the Laurels, of Bound Brook, seems to be the mainstay of that team. He is certainly a good one and can hold his own with any of the pitchers in the league.

(Other sporting news on page eight).

F. H. Andrews, of Central avenue, has returned from a trip to Cleveland.

Charles Staats, of Brooklyn, spent Saturday and Sunday with relatives in town.

Miss Gladys A. Brokaw, of this city, has been visiting relatives at Bound Brook.

Plainfield, N. J., June 3, 1907.

The Minneapolis Journal is authority for the statement that the word "thousand" on the new $1,000 certificates is mispelled. Strange we hadn't noticed it.

With snow in the Catskills, a tornado in the Bronx and giant waves dashing over the board walks at Asbury Park and Atlantic City, yesterday, can truthfully be described as a "rare" June day.

WHY JUDGE WAS MERCIFUL.

Knew What Prison Sentence Meant to the Criminal.

The judge and the district attorney lunched together at the end of the case. "Three months," said the district attorney, as he cut the omelette hongroise, "was a merciful sentence, sir." "Perhaps, perhaps," the judge agreed. He sipped his mineral water. "Did you ever spend three months in jail?" he asked. "Of course not!" laughed the district attorney. "Well, if you had," said the judge, "perhaps you wouldn't think so lightly of it." He knitted his brows. "The evil-tasting food, the prison smell, the prison morals—pah! I," he went on, "spent a week in jail before I entered on my judgeship. I ate the prison food. I slept in a cell. I conformed with all the prison rules. I wore the prison clothes. I did prison work. Thus I learned the value of the sentences I was to mete out later on. I got to know what a week, a month, a year, in jail meant. As a result I am more merciful than most judges. I think it would be a good thing if every judge before taking office would spend a little while in jail as I did. He then would know the value of prison sentences, a thing he doesn't know now. Now he is like a cashier who attempts to pay out money in a coinage of which he is ignorant. In Baden this thing I speak of must be done. Every judge in Baden before he takes his seat on the bench is required by law to pass two weeks like a common prisoner in jail."

WAS THERE IN PLAIN SIGHT.

Injunction Quite Clear to Unsophisticated Girl.

A Camden business man has at his home a recently arrived Irish girl for a servant, says the Philadelphia Ledger. One day last week he was called out of town on business, and a telegram came to the house for him. The girl received the telegram and took it to her mistress, who looked at the address on the wrapper and laid it aside. A little later the servant picked the telegram up, and noticing that it was still unopened went to her mistress and said: "Thot teelgram has not yit bin opened; why do yez not open it?" "Why should I open it, Molly?" replied the mistress. "It is not for me." "Well, it says on the envelope, 'Ter be opened.'" Molly brought the telegram and her mistress, looking it over, remarked: "I don't see anything about it's to be opened." For answer the servant triumphantly pointed out in one corner of the envelope the following: "Received at Branch Office, No. —, Broadway. Always open."

Narrow Escape.

Mr. Ferguson, two of whose downtown friends had just dined with him, had taken them into the library for a smoke. "I must tell you a good one on my wife," he said. "She's been roasting me because I look at the headlines in the papers once in a while to see if anything important is happening in the Thaw trial. Well, the other afternoon, while the girl was away, she put a pan of biscuits in the oven to bake, and while she was waiting she picked up a paper and began to read the stuff herself. She got so interested in it that she let the biscuits—" At this moment Mrs. Ferguson came into the library for a book. "And the joke of it was," continued Mr. Ferguson, without a moment's pause, "that they found the cow next morning in a 40-acre lot." "Ha, ha, ha!" roared the guests, laughing till the tears ran down their cheeks—but not at the story.

A Ninety-Dollar Umbrella.

"On Mme. Bernhardt's last visit to us," said a manager, "she was beguiled one afternoon to a charity bazar at the St. Regis. She was beautifully dressed in gray, with an umbrella of gray silk, and as she stood at the embroidery booth she laid the umbrella on the counter. Instantly the girl who conducted the booth seized the pretty umbrella, waved it over her head, and cried: 'How much am I bid for Mme. Bernhardt's umbrella? Fifty? Twenty-five? Ten?' And while the actress looked on smiling there ensued a spirited auction that ended in the umbrella's sale to a western brewer for $90."

No Lack of Water.

Maj. Gillette's philippics against the water wasters fall at times upon deaf ears. An inspector who was visiting West Philadelphia dwellings to discover who were guilty of wasting water found in one house that a water flush was constantly flowing. "How long has that water been running?" he asked the tenant. "How long?" echoed the other in amazement. "Yes." "I don't know." "Don't know?" queried the inspector incredulously. "No. I've been living here four years. It's been running ever since I've been here." A plumber has since received a hurry call to that house.

Terror of the Air.

Wilfred—"Pa, a man who is continually on a ship is called a sea dog, isn't he?" Gunbusta—"That's what they call him, my boy." Wilfred—"Well, if he's a sea dog, then a man who is continually on an airship must be a skye terrier."—Judge.

Going the Rounds.

Borrowby—"Let's see—do I owe you anything?" Morrowby—"Not a cent, my boy. Going round paying your little debts?" Borrowby—"No, I was going round seeing if I had overlooked anybody. Lend me five till Saturday, will you?"—Lippincott's.

FOR THE HOUSEKEEPER.

Where hard water is used, if a common marble, not glass, is put in the kettle, it will prevent the flakes of lime from forming on the sides.

When linoleum begins to show wear paint the surface with a good quality of floor varnish and allow it a longer time to dry than would be necessary for wooden boards.

A pair of extra sleeves drawn up on the lower portion of your sleeve, and a big bib apron as long as your gown, makes it possible to get into the kitchen with a pretty gown on and emerge therefrom spotless and dainty as before.

A useful piece of kitchen furniture is a table covered with heavy tin or zinc. It costs but little and lasts so long. You can always have a nice, clean table with little care. No unsightly, greasy oilcloth after preparing meat, etc.

To prevent rust, heat the article well and rub in thoroughly common beeswax. Then rub well with a cloth until the wax is well rubbed in. Knives, tin or iron kettles or any article which will rust have been kept years in this manner.

WRITERS AND PAINTERS.

The Russian nihilist, Maxim Gorky, is dying with consumption. His writings have made him wealthy.

Winston Churchill receives a royalty of 30 cents a volume, and his receipts from one book are said to have been $150,000.

Now eighty years old, Mr. William Holman-Hunt, the great artist, will never paint another picture. His eyesight has failed him.

It is said that at last John L. Sargeant has pointed his masterpiece. It is a portrait of the Countess of Essex, who was Adele Beach Grant, of New York.

Strikingly in contrast with the unbusinesslike methods of most authors, those of Israel Zangwill and George Bernard Shaw are said to be business and calculating. It is common talk among publishers that they drive hard bargains and demand every penny of their rights.

THE ROYAL BOX.

There have been twenty-seven cases of insanity in the Bavarian royal family during the last 100 years.

Prince Eugene of Sweden is known in artistic and literary circles of Paris as E. Oscarson and devotes much of his time to traveling with his intimates and in painting.

Possibly the record in names belongs to the daughter of the Archduke Stephen of Austria. She has eighteen, beginning with Maria Immaculate Caroline Margarette Blanca, Leopoldine Beatrix.

Four Lost In Yacht Wreck.

New York, June 3.—Edward Auth, a young business man of Manhattan who, with his brother, his brother-in-law and two friends left Williamsburg Thursday morning for a cruise up the Sound, was found unconscious, lashed to the bottom of his yacht, off Norwalk, Conn., late yesterday afternoon. From a cot in the New Haven Hospital, in New Haven, Conn., last night, in periods of consciousness he was only able to tell disjointly of a wreck in the early morning, in which all the others were swept away and he was saved only by a line which he managed to grasp when in the water, with hich he climbed upon the bottom of the upturned boat, where he made himself secure. The dead men were: Jacob Auth, manufacturer of signal devices; Otto Flegar, merchant; George Glasser, electrician; August Jeager, business man.

Firearm Habit Came in Handy.

Panama, Panama, June 3.—In a much advertised tiger and bull fight yesterday afternoon, which was witnessed by three thousand persons, one-third of whom were Americans, the tiger in trying to get away from the bull broke out of the enclosure and made for the grandstand. A panic was averted by a fusillade of shots, which resulted in the death of the tiger after he got through the first ten rows of seats. The firearm carrying proclivity of the people of this country came in good stead, as the killing of the tiger prevented a crush that could have resulted in the loss of life. A bull fighter in a regular man and bull fight, which preceded the main event, was severely gored by the bull.

"Calling to Remembrance the Former Days," was the subject of a Memorial Day sermon by Rev. Dr. E. P. Johnson in Trinity Reformed church, last eveing. It was a strong, patriotic sermon, full of beautiful thoughts on Memorial Day and the brave men who fought, bled and died for their country in the Civil War. The G. A. R. men of Plainfield would do well to ask Dr. Johnson to repeat the sermon before the old veterans, at some future day.

Ate Powder, Lost Speech.

Worcester, Mass., June 3.—While playing on the lawn in front of the home of Henry Willard, in Milford, Harry Bernard, six years old, found a package containing a white powder. Thinking it was sugar he put some of it in his mouth. The powder burned Harry's mouth, tongue and lips, and he ran home. His parents called in Dr. Halbert L. Keith, who treated him and believes him now out of danger. The boy, however, has lost the power of speech and Dr. Keith cannot account for it. Mr. Willard says he spread the powder over the grass to kill ants. He doesn't know what the poison is, saying he asked in a store for something to kill ants and got the powder.

Overworked Priest Collapses.

New York, June 3.—Weakened by severe attacks of rheumatism and lack of sleep due to his untiring work for his parish, the Rev. Father Henry Van Rensselaer, an assistant priest of the Church of St. Francis Xavier, fell unconscious late yesterday afternoon as he was about to get on a Broadway car at Fifteenth street. When picked up by passengers of the car he was suffering from a scalp wound, and was taken to the New York Hospital. The surgeons said last night that he would have to remain in the institution for several days.

Saved $30,000 In Silver.

Pulaski, Tenn., June 3.—Stricken with the fear that he would be murdered for his money, Willis Smith, eighty-four years old, has flooded the county with $30,000 in quarters and half dollars, which he has been hiding in fruit jars for many years. The money was coined two generations ago, but is not worn. Many years ago Smith put some money in a bank and the cashier at once paid it out on a check. Smith saw this and withdrew his money, saying he would not do business with a concern that would not keep his money "better than that."

Lightning Hits Balloon.

Rome, June 3.—A military baloon, 1,300 feet in the air, ascending at a royal review in Rome before the sovereigns of Italy and an army of troops, was struck by lightning yesterday and hurled burning to the earth with its occupant, Lieutenant Olivelli. The aeronaut was fatally hurt and soon died in a hospital.

ANOTHER WHITE SEASON.

The spring and summer of 1907 are evidently to be notable for the light colors that will prevail in woman's attire, though by autumn black and navy blue are likely to get the lead here that they have recently had in Paris.

This is noted as a hint for the conservative woman who buys her tailor-made with the idea of having it last well, as well as for its present cost. For this woman the best results are obtained by selecting the plain smart cuts and strict tailored finish associated with the custom tailor.

The Mystery of Carneycroft

BY JOSEPH BROWN COOKE COPYRIGHT 1907 BY STORY-PRESS CORPORATION

"Yes," I returned, "and a most mild mannered woman, too. You never would imagine that she could be capable of originating such a startling plot. It really was quite exciting while it lasted."

"I wonder if I saw her the other day," continued Miss Weston. "Was it the gentle-faced, motherly old soul who lives in the new house over by the orchard?"

"The very one," I replied, laughing. "And this same motherly old soul, as you call her, can be as self-contained and tragic as you please when occasion requires. She ought to be on the stage, I assure you."

"Why, what did she do that was so tragic?" they exclaimed in a breath, and Miss Carney continued, reprovingly: "You couldn't have told us the whole story, I'm sure. Please give us the tragic part of it at once, Mr. Ware."

"Well," I said, thoughtfully. "Dr. MacArdel put her through a course of spouts that made a strong, hearty man faint away twice, and yet she never said a word nor moved a muscle."

"How delightfully interesting!" said Miss Weston. "I should never have dreamed from her appearance that she had so much fortitude. What could Dr. MacArdel have done that was so thrilling?"

"Oh, he didn't do much," I returned. "He just asked some questions about the things that had been going on, but he did it in a way that was very effective. We wanted to learn who wrote the mysterious note that I had received on the night of my arrival. We found out that she did it, but it was only by chance and not through anything that she told us. If she had been a little more clever in deilvering the other I am afraid we would be in the dark about it yet."

"And so this Mrs. Bruce really wrote them both, did she?" asked Miss Weston, with continued interest. "What a horrible creature she must be!"

"I don't believe she is exactly horrible," I said, cautiously, "but she certainly wrote the second note, and whoever wrote that one must have written the first as well."

"Wouldn't it be interesting if some more would come!" cried Miss Weston, enthusiastically. "I think it would be the greatest fun in the world!"

"You might change your mind if it really happened," I said with a smile. "These things are well enough after they are explained, but before that time, they strike one rather seriously, as I know from experience."

"Well, I'd be willing to try it just for once," said Miss Weston, confidently. "I'm simply crazy to see what a real good mystery is like at first hand."

As I chanced to move my plate a folded paper was disclosed and I hastily slipped it into my lap and read it surreptitiously. It said:

"You have not kept Miss Carney and her friends away. Do not be surprised if the ghosts return."

"Your wish is granted, Miss Weston," I exclaimed, holding it up in my hand. "Here is one of the spook notes this very minute. It is under my plate."

"Oh, do let me take it!" she entreated, and I passed it to her by way of Miss Carney, who read it thoughtfully before handing it to her friend.

The moment Miss Watson saw the paper a most unaccountable thing occurred. Her face blanched and she swayed in her seat for an instant as if in danger of falling, but regaining her self-control in another moment, she exclaimed:

"How silly I am! This ridiculous note made me quite dizzy for a minute. Where did you say you found it, Mr. Ware? Under your plate, here at the table? Why, some one must be playing a joke on us all!"

"No doubt," I returned, watching her closely. "But it may prove to be a very serious joke. You see, a thing of this kind is more startling than one would expect. I've grown rather used to it myself, but you seem to be quite upset over it."

"Oh, it's just for the moment," said Miss Weston, with a forced laugh. "I didn't get much sleep last night and this thing came on me so suddenly and unexpectedly that it quite took my breath away."

A moment later she left the table on some trivial pretext, and Miss Carney called the butler, who had left us to our coffee before this conversation began, and questioned him closely as to the affairs of the morning. He said that he had laid the plates himself not long before we came down to breakfast and that while he had not been in the room all the time he was positive that no one could have entered without his knowledge.

"It looks as if you must have slipped it under your plate yourself, Mr. Ware," said Miss Carney in a bantering tone that ill betokened her true frame of mind. "There doesn't seem to be any other explanation. And do you really think the ghosts will come back again? I shall not let you go away until they are permanently suppressed, you may be sure."

"I know I appear to be guilty," I replied, with a laugh, "but I assure you I am not. You are merely having a taste of the same mysterious phenomena that I myself saw here last summer. I cannot say whether the ghosts will return or not, but I scarcely think they will. If they do, we know where to go to discourage them."

"But how do you suppose the note was placed under your plate?" asked Miss Carney, in an anxious tone. "I don't like this sort of thing at all! It makes me dreadfully nervous."

"I haven't the slightest idea," I said, frankly, "But I am sure we will find out all about it before long. You know the other notes seemed very mysterious at first, but we soon explained them without the slightest difficulty."

As I said these words I thanked my lucky stars that I had taken the precaution to keep Miss Carney in ignorance concerning the cigar case and the odor of the rags that we found in Jenks' possession. For my part, the mystery of Carney-Croft seemed to be growing deeper and deeper, and yet I felt it my duty to my hostess to make as light of the matter as possible, especially in the presence of her other guests.

After breakfast Miss Carney and I walked down toward the river together and passed the spot where MacArdel had questioned Jenks and the widow.

"This is where you saw the ghosts, isn't it?" asked Miss Carney, with a little nervous shudder.

"Yes," I replied, "and we could have captured them, too, if we had not been so sure that we already had bigger game in our hands."

"I do hope they won't come back again," she said with a shiver. "I'm almost as much upset over it as Annie was. But she is not at all well, Mr. Ware. Do you know, I really think she is growing weaker and weaker every day. Her spirits keep her up and all that, but she certainly hasn't the strength she used to have."

"I suppose that is why the note affected her so," I returned. "You remember, she was actually calling for some ghostly manifestation only a moment before, and yet you must have noticed how completely she lost her head when I found the paper."

"But not until she had read it," said Miss Carney. "She didn't seem to mind it at all until then, you know."

"It almost seemed to me that she recognized the writing," I said guardedly. "Did you ever see it before?"

I handed Miss Carney the note, which was in the flowing hand of the Widow Bruce as MacArdel and I had seen it on that eventful night in the summer. She studied it carefully for some time and then said:

"No, it is totally unfamiliar to me. I hardly think that Annie knows anything about it, either. It was merely her weakness that upset her, Mr. Ware. You cannot realize how feeble she is."

We returned to the house as the moring mail arrived and it chanced to be handed to me for distribution. As I sorted over the letters I came across one for Miss Weston and it was addressed in the now well-known hand of the Bruce woman and had been posted in the village the day before. I stuffed it in my pocket without comment, and, when I had an opportunity to hand it to its owner, she returned my significant glance with a look of such pathetic appeal that I knew she was innocent of any wrong doing, and that, at the most, she had become unwillingly entangled in this almost unfathomable mystery, which seemed to grow from hour to hour.

CHAPTER XVI.

From Another Angle.

Miss Carney knew nothing of the letter that Miss Weston had received from Mrs. Bruce, and when I saw her again, just before luncheon, she expressed great concern over her friend's condition.

"Do you know, Mr. Ware," she said anxiously, "Annie was dreadfully upset over that note this morning. She has shut herself in her room all day and even refuses to see me. I have just tried to persuade her to come down to luncheon, but she won't do it, and says she doesn't want anything sent up, either. She has so little strength now that it worries me to have her go without her meals in this way, and then, she has been crying, too, which is very bad for her and a thing that she almost never does. I could tell by the way she spoke and when she opened the door to answer me she wouldn't let me see her face."

"Perhaps she is a trifle ashamed of her ignominious collapse at the table this morning after she had expressed so much bravery only the moment before," I suggested. "She was evidently deeply affected all of a sudden, you know."

"Yes," said Miss Carney, soberly, "and I don't understand it at all. But I am sure she knows nothing about the writing. How could she, Mr. Ware, when I cannot recognize it myself? It was just a nervous attack, of course, but I wish she did not take it so seriously, for the least little thing uses her up so."

Nothing was said at the luncheon table about the affair of the morning, and Miss Weston's vacant chair seemed to give an air of gloom to the whole party.

In the afternoon I wandered about the grounds by myself, trying to decide what I ought to do. The quandary I was in was not due to be easily surmounted, for, while I realized that my duty to Miss Carney, as well as my own personal inclinations in the matter, called upon me most imperatively to clear up this mystery promptly and at any cost, I was still convinced that Miss Weston's share in the affair was entirely unexpected by her and due to no wilful act of her own, and the pathetic appeal in her eyes when I handed her Mrs. Bruce's letter was enough to make me preserve her secret faithfully for the present at least.

It was beginning to grow dark as I turned to go back to the house and, when about half way up the "ghost walk," as we had jokingly named the path that led to the river, I saw Miss Weston coming slowly toward me. She must have heard my step at the same instant, and, looking up, she hastened to my side and laid her hand on my arm while her bosom rose and fell, her eyes filled with tears, and her form trembled with suppressed emotion.

"Oh, Mr. Ware," she whispered, "you were so good this morning not to let any one see that letter. It was so foolish of them to send it in that way, right through the mail, though there was only a chance that anyone but a servant would have seen it. You won't tell of it, Mr. Ware? I know you won't," she sobbed softly. "I beg of you, Mr. Ware; I beg of you, do not speak of it for a few days at least, until I can find out what should be done."

I led her to a seat by the side of the path and tried to calm her with reassuring words, but her nervousness seemed only to increase.

"I cannot tell you now what I know about it all," she went on, wiping away the tears that flowed freely down her face. "Oh, it's too terrible even to think of, and yet no one has done any wrong. You must trust me implicitly, Mr. Ware, and the time may come when I can tell you everything. But not now. I even know very little about it myself, and that little chills the very blood in my veins. May God forgive me," she murmured; "it is all my fault, and yet I have done no wrong. You must believe that, Mr. Ware, as you would believe your own senses, and trust me in everything, or I shall go mad!"

She leaned forward weeping bitterly, and I said nothing until she began to control herself once more and choke down her sobs in an effort to speak again. Then I said gently:

"PHIL" SMITH PITCHES FINE GAME AT WESTFIELD

OUT-TWIRLS LINDEMAN AND BLANKS SLUGGING SUMMITS.

Phil. Smith came back to form Saturday and he and Westfield made good in the Lackawanna League, defeating Summit by a score of 1 to 0. It was a great game, the best game played in Westfield in three years. The fans went wild with delight, and the odds of two to one given on Summit up to the sixth inning found ready takers. The game was a pitcher's battle between Smith and Lindeman, and the way Summit's heavy hitters fanned at everything delighted the Mt. Ararat enthusiasts and discouraged the visiting rooters. Summit scored only one hit off Smith, and that was scratch. The Westfield team is now rounding in shape and should give the best in the league a good view before the season ends. The score:

Another for Holy Cross.

The Holy Cross Club team defeated the Stillman School team, Saturday, by a score of 19 to 1. The Grammar boys did not have a look-in from start to finish, and it was not until the sixth inning that they were able to tally and a total of fifteen errors was largely responsible for defeat. PITCHER RANDOLPH TOO MUCH FOR LAURELS

CLINTON AVENUE'S BOXMAN HELD THEM DOWN TO THREE HITS.

Clifford Randolph had the "Indian sign" on the Laurels, of Bound Brook, Saturday, and as a result the local agregation received its worst defeat of the season since the amateur league opened. The score was 10 to 0 in favor of the Plainfield boys. Randolph fanned sixteen batsmen and had his opponents completely at his mercy. Howard Giles caught in faultless style, taking the place of O'Loughlin, who was injured on Decoration Day.

The Clinton Avenues touched Harney for fifteen hits, including several extra bases. B. Martin and Emery led in the stick work with three hits each. The latter is proving himself to be one of the best utility men in the league. The whole team played a hard and fast game throughout, determined to redeem itself for the Decoration Day exhibition against Y. M. C. A. The score:

LEAGUE TEAMS PLAY A "SMALL BOY" GAME.

Score in the Y. M. C. A.-Dunellen Contest Shows a Need of Ginger On Both Sides.

The Y. M. C. A. nine held its lead in the Inter-City League, Saturday, by defeating Dunellen in a poorly played game. The score was 19 to 8, and the "contest" was just as bad as the figures indicate.

The result of the meeting between the teams was baseball mangled beyond recognition. Y. M. C. A. was bad, but Dunellen was rank beyond criticism; pity, not censure, is what is coming to the suburbanites. Conover pitched a good game for the association, but none of the three pitchers used by Dunellen was effective or steady. Y. M. C. A. used two substitute catchers, and Schoonmaker did well enough, but none of the three put into service by Dunellen helped the other end of the battery much. Everything figured in the scoring, from hits to dropped pops. There were twenty-nine stolen bases.

A handful of fans saw the "game." The score:

Potter A. C. Win, 9 to 0.

The Potter A. C. played the Metuchen A. C., at Metuchen, on Saturday, and won the game by forfeit by a score of 9 to 0. Up to the ninth inning the score was 3 to 1 in favor of Metuchen and in that inning the Potters had three men on bases and only one out, when the umpire gave a decision which caused dispute and the abrupt termination of the game. According to the Potter A. C., the umpire afterward admited he was wrong and was willing to change his decision, but it was then too late.

Croker Hopes to Win Derby.

New York, June 3.—Richard Croker may be oversanguine in his estimate of his three-year-old colt Orby, son of Orme and the American mare Rhoda B., when he tells hundreds of Irish and American friends that the colt has a great chance to win on Wednesday at Epsom the most coveted turf prize of the world, the Derby. Whether Orby wins or loses, however, his owner has made every effort to have him ridden by the best jockey in England, and went so far as to offer "Danny" Maher $7,500 to ride him, win or lose. Maher, however, was compelled to decline this munificent offer, as he is to pilot Lord Derby's candidate in the race, and when he was in this country last winter he said he would give an arm to achieve this distinction for the high class turfman after whose ancestor the most famous turf event in the world is named. In lieu of Maher another American rider, "Johnny" Reiff, who for the last three years has been riding in France, will be intrusted with the task of doing justice to Orby.

THE HAPPY END.

The story was ended. The villain was dead. The wedding bells had rung out their joyous peal, and that had been done which cannot be undone. The elderly lovers, and the village softheads, and most of the remaining characters in the story had been paired off in the usual way, and the author had thrown down his pen, and gone forth to drink. The end had been reached. The last page had been turned. The reader had closed the book with a sigh, and the happy pair had started on their honeymoon.

As the train flew on, past field and meadow, hill and dale, suddenly she turned on him.

"Gerald!" she cried.

"My love!" he answered. "What is the matter?"

"Oh, Gerald!" she said. "Only to think! There was no orange blossom."

"By George," said he. "Come to think of it, there wasn't. But you had a splendid peal, sweetheart."

"Yes, the bells were very pretty," she sighed. "I suppose it must have been a slip of the author's."

"Yes," he answered slowly—"slipped on the peal."

"Gerald!" She looked at him with eyes into which the tears would come. "And this was to have been such a happy ending, too!"

Modesty of Greatness.

John Hancock was about to affix his signature to the immortal declaration of independence.

"It is a conspicuous honor," he said, "to be the first signer. Therefore, in order that I may not seem to be distinguished above my fellow patriots, I shall write my name in a clear, legible and clerkly style. All great men, you know, write miserable hands."

But the world has persisted in considering John Hancock an exception to this rule.—Chicago Tribune.

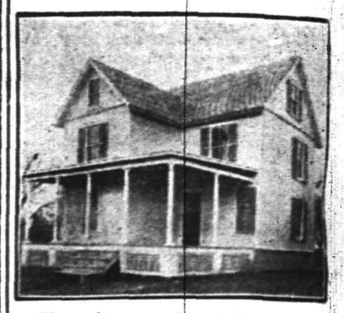
NEW SYSTEM OF BUILDING.

A MARVEL IN THE SCIENCE OF CONSTRUCTION.

A method far in advance of anything formerly used in the preparation of the different parts of a house when erected in sections, making it easy to construct any design of a house, and a very superior house for all seasons, countries and climates at a great reduction in cost.



These houses are constructed principally from the best kiln dried lumber in a factory entirely protected from weather, where best high speed woodworking machines are used for cutting and shaping of every piece, reducing cost for mechanics fully one-half, making a superior house when finished.

Houses or other structures erected under this system make the warmest houses in winter, and the strongest building that can be constructed with any material, the fiercest storm fails to cause any vibration whatever. They are adapted to receive all improvements, plumbing, lighting, heating, etc., when desired.

A new method of lath and plaster is used for interior finish, making a perfect indestructable wall superior to anything ever before used.

PAVE ORDINANCE HELD UP

Put Back on Second Reading After Councilmen Do a Lot of Talking.

GOES OVER TO JUNE 10

President Daniel Expresses Views On the Subject and Citizens Speak for and Against.

The question of paving the streets in the business section of the city with brick, as provided for in an ordinance previously passed on two readings, and which Chairman Ginna, of the street committee, called up on third and final reading at the June meeting of the Common Council, last night, started a discussion which for a time looked as though it might be extended over until tonight for a decision. Mr. Ginna called up the ordinance on third reading late in the evening, not anticipating any lengthy debate, as the matter had been threshed out in committee meeting.

Before final disposition was made of the ordinance, the members went into a committee of the whole and discussed the question pro and con, and being unable to unite on the ordinance as drafted, eventually adopted Mr. Mellick's motion to have it put back on second reading where it can and will undoubtedly be amended at a meeting to be held Monday night, June 10. The present idea is to eliminate North avenue from the streets to be paved with brick, thus cutting out $7,000 of expense. This will delay the passage of the ordinance about ten days.

After Mr. Ginna called the ordinance up on third reading, Mr. Mellick stated that after hearing the views of citizens present, as well as others, which seemed to favor a modification of the present ordinance, he moved to put the ordinance back on second reading with the idea of amending it to include only Watchung avenue, from Front to Fourth streets; East Front street, from Watchung avenue to and including Somerset street. He thought this would save the city considerable money as the trolley company would be called upon to pay a share of the expense for the improvement.

At this time President Daniel asked Mr. Tyler to take the chair, and he availed himself of the opportunity of speaking on the subject. He said that when the ordinance was first introduced he voted no, although he favored brick pavement. He had noticed the wood pavement in New York and was not impressed with it. At the time permanent pavement was considered for Watchung avenue he urged that improvement, but in the present ordinance he believed that the street committee had planned to do too much. He thought it would be wise to include Watchung avenue between Fourth and Front streets, Front street to and including Somerset street. There also appeared to be a question as to whether the city would have the right to assess property-owners for the brick pavement, when they had previously paid for macadamizing. Another question that arose in his mind as to the advisability of the improvement as planned was in reference to the time limit on the proposed bond issue. He thought that the city would have to wait too long before it would get its money back and the pavement might be worn out in the meantime.

Mr. Tyler said that he for one did not want to see the improvement defeated, yet he felt like Mr. Mellick. He believed that a stretch of the pavement should be put down and if it proved satisfactory then continue it through the desired streets where it would be needed the most. He realized that Mr. Ginna as chairman of the street committee had devoted a lot of time to a consideration of the matter and his judgment should be relied upon. Finally, Mr. Tyler suggested that the Common Council go into a committee of the whole and discuss the question informally.

The suggestion was accepted and at the request of President Daniel, Mr. Tyler took the chair. Mr. Ginna was the first speaker. He said that the ordinance had been carfeully considered and that all agreed that brick is the best pavement to adopt. Personally, he said he would be sorry to see Park and Watchung avenues and Front street eliminated, and he believed that a majority of the citizens favor the pavement of these streets included in the ordinance.

Mr. Montgomery said that he, for one did not favor experiments, and he believed that the city would make none in using brick. It had stood the test in many cities and he thought no time should be lost in adopting it as the pavement for Plainfield. He also cited the fact that it was at the suggestion of the citizens and the Board of Trade that the question of permanent pavement was taken up and that Mayor Fisk had

HOSPITAL ASKS CITY FOR ANNUAL TAX

WANTS THE QUESTION DECIDED BY VOTERS AT REGULAR ELECTION.

Following a half-hour recess during which time the members considered the proposition, Mr. Mellick, at the June meeting of the Common Council, last night, presented a communication from President W. R. Cock, of the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital, in which the board seeks to have the city contribute to the hospital through an annual tax, the question first to be decided by the voters at the regular election to be held November 5 next.

The communication set forth the fact that Muhlenberg Hospital is a private institution and is being supported almost entirely by private subscriptions and donations, and in view of the fact that the city does not own a hospital, it was suggested that by contributing a certain amount each year of the general tax money raised it would give the institution substantial support in return for which the indigent poor of the city will be cared for.

The State law regarding this matter permits the city to appropriate one-third of a mill on every dollar raised by tax for the hospital for a period of ten years.

Mr. Mellick urged favorable action on this matter, adding that he believed that a large majority of the citizens would welcome the opportunity to vote in this way in favor of a plan to support the hospital.

President Daniel took the floor and spoke on the matter before the Council, referring more especially to the law. He explained that when the act was passed Plainfield's share of tax for the hospital, based on the percentage of one-third of a mill on every dolar raised by taxation would have been $3,500. Today it would be $7,000 a year. He also called attention to the fact that on ballots to be used for the purpose of deciding the question, the law provides that where the question "for" or "against" is not marked off, it counts in favor of it, and he did not think a fair expression of opinion would be possible under these conditions. He did not know what provision was made on the voting machines for such a vote. The matter was finally referred to the finance committee and will probably come up at some future time.

POLICE HEADQUARTERS CONDITION STIRS COUNCIL.

Orders An Investigation to Place Responsibility of Annoying Water Leakage.

For the purpose of ascertaining exactly who is responsible for the deplorable condition of the police station and other rooms used by the police department in connection with headquarters in the Coward building on East Front street, through the leakage of water from the upper part of the building, Chairman Randolph, of the police committee, offered a resolution at the June meeting of the Common Council, last night, authorizing and instructing Corporation Counsel Marsh to make an investigation.

Frequently water is allowed to run down through the building causing much annoyance to the members of the police department, and it was thought best to have Mr. Marsh investigate and learn whether the fault lies with the owner of the building or any of the tenants. Mr. Tyler thought it was a matter that should be attended to by the police committee, which, he said, has the necessary power, but the majority of the members thought otherwise. Mr. Tyler voted against the resolution.

The question of revising the city's official assessment maps was introduced by Mr. Hibbard, and Assessor H. C. VanEmburgh was authorized to make all the necessary changes for the past year; also to locate all of the new buildings built in that time on the map. His compensation for ding this work is not to exceed $200.

The Public Service Corporation, through its president, Thomas N. McCarter, communicated with the Common Council at its June meeting, last night, acknowledging the previous claim of the city for a reduction of its electric light bills for "lamps out" and a diminution of candle power. Mr. McCarter said that the company would promptly deduct the amount, $34.86 for "lamps out," but as the twenty-five candle power lamp used, is the standard it would be impossible to allow for any reduction in the candle power. He said that this would necessitate the changing of lamps every week or so and that could not be done. The communication was received and filed and later in the evening the company's bills were paid with the amount of $34.86 deducted.

The petition of Lena Kline for permission to substitute cement block for wood in a building she is erecting at 544 West Third street, was granted as was also the petition of J. W. Hallard to erect a building on West Third street of concrete and wood material. The petition of L. D. Harris for permission to erect a barn of cement blocks at 535 West Front street was also granted.

William Hand & Sons, who have been furnishing a team of horses for taking No. 2 engine of the fire department to fires on certain calls, informed the Common Council that about twelve additional calls have been added to the calls for the team and in their judgment the compensation should be increased. The matter was referred to the fire and building committee.

The Plainfield-Union Water Supply Company informed the Council that two new hydrants were located as directed, and the Public Service Corporation gave similar notice as to a number of additional electric lights. The communications were referred to the proper committees and later filed.

W. J. Counihan and others petitioned to have Pruden's alley, adjoining the New Plainfield theatre, macadamized, and the matter was referred to the street committee.

The Board of School Estimate informed the Council that it would require $71,000 for the public schools for the coming year from July 1, and Mr. Hibbard, acting for Mr. Tolles, chairman of the finance committee, introduced a supplemental ordinance to be incorporated in the tax ordinance, providing the raising of that amount of money for school purposes. The ordinance was adopted on two readings and ordered advertised. This amount is exclusive of that to be apportioned by the county superintendent of schools.

Horace G. Adams, clerk of the district court, reported receipts of $76.57 for the past month and a balance of $480.

The contract and bond of the Watchung Stone Company were reported as having been executed and the same were filed. Building Inspector T. O. Doane reported that during the past month thirty-six permits were granted.

Mayor Fisk appointed Felix Chargois and J. Claassen as regular members of the fire department and the same were confirmed. Special Policeman W. R. Overland tendered his resignation and it was accepted.

A resolution offered by Mr. Hibbard, which was adopted, transferred $2,000 from the general to the fire fund. Mr. Hibbard also reported on a communication received from County Superintendent of Schools W. J. Shearer, of Elizabeth, in which the latter stated that Plainfield's share of the county school money will be $80,417.17, of which $28,500, the amount from the railroad tax, is at present somewhat in doubt.

Another matter reported on by Mr. Hibbard was in reference to Plainfield's share of franchise tax from the Public Service Corporation. As the city receives five per cent. on the gross receipts of the company here, which amounts to $6,073.70, it will accept that sum instead of the $1,250.78, which would be the city's share through the State's treasury as determined by the State Board of Taxation.

Mr. Hibbard offered an ordinance, which was adopted on two readings and ordered advertised, which gives Building Inspector Doane the authority to grant permission to move a building from one point to another on the same tract of land, but President Daniel raised a good point of objection and the ordinance was re-

MAN WHO ROBBED HOTEL IN DUNELLEN CAUGHT

CAPTURED IN NEW BRUNSWICK, AS POLICE HERE WERE LOOKING FOR HIM.

The police here received word this morning of the arrest, yesterday afternoon at New Brunswick, of a man they had been looking for. The prisoner, who describes himself as Joseph Fisher, of Paterson, is accused of stealing clothes from two hotels. Part of his alleged loot, it was said, he sold to a second hand clothes dealer in North Plainfield.

Fisher appeared at Dufour's hotel, Bound Brook, last Wednesday afternoon, and registered. He stayed until Thursday. When he went, Dufour alleges, he took two suits, a rain coat and a pair of shoes belonging to Dufour and a boarder. Fisher is said to have gone from Bound Brook to New Brunswick, staying there until Saturday. On the latter day, it is alleged, he went to Taylor's hotel, Dunellen, and stole two pairs of shoes. Saturday night, it is charged, he went to the clothes dealer in North Plainfield and sold a suit and the shoes.

Chief Kiely was apprised of the robbery in Dunellen yesterday morning, and he instituted a search for the man. He got trace of him, and was preparing to communicate with the police of New Brunswick this morning when Dufour came to headquarters with news of Fisher's arrest. The prisoner is about 23 years old, and appears to be a Pole.

SPECIAL AUTO COPS PREPARE FOR CAMPAIGN

ADOPT FORM OF NOTICE THAT IS TO BE SENT TO SPEEDERS.

The eight "gentlemen specials" appointed by Mayor Fisk to help in controlling the automobile speeders met for organization and to formulate plans of action at the Mayor's office last night. Dr. F. C. Ard was made chairman and L. R. Thurlow secretary.

The eight will fare forth in their autos on Sunday and holidays and keep vigilant watch for reckless drivers. They adopted a form of notice that will be sent to offenders spotted on the streets. This notice calls the attention of the offender to his breach of a law, and urges him o be careful that it does not occur again. Threat of arrest when next he is caught at it lends vigor to the notice. The specials will note the number on all speeding machines and the owners thereof will receive one of the notices.

The specials will be helped in the Sunday and holiday tours by the two motor-cycle policemen provided for by the Council. They learned last night that additional signs of warning had been posted about town where auto users could see them.

Mayor Fisk encouraged the eight by passing on to them a message of approval from State Automobile Commissioner Smith. The latter heartily approves of the methods adopted here. He intends to come to Plainfield shortly and see how the work is progressing.

MRS. HALL RETURNS.

Found Her Distinguished Mother in Excellent Health and Spirits.

Mrs. Florence Howe Hall has returned from her visit to Boston, where she attended the birthday celebration of her mother, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe. Mrs. Hall found her mother in excellent health and spirits. Although this venerable lady attended the banquet given in her honor by the New England Women's Club, of which she is president, on Saturday, May 25, in addition to receiving some eighty guests at her home, on May 27, she was none the worse for the experience. The Italian vice-consul, who was present, asked leave to bring the Duke of Abruzzi to meet Mrs. Howe, when he comes to Boston.

Mrs. Hall lectured at Nybridge, Mass., before returning to Plainfield.

P. H. S. MUSICALE.

Senior Class Enjoyed Annual Affair This Morning.

According to the custom of a number of years, Charles L. Lewis, instructor of music in the city schools, furnished his annual musicale to the senior class of the Plainfield High School at the regular assembly this morning. It was a musical interpretation of "Enoch Arden" and a perfect example of the musical drama. Miss Sara A. Palmer read the poem, parts of which were accompanied on the piano by Mrs. Charles Lewis. The music is composed by Richard Strauss, and the different moods of the characters are represented.

CELEBRATE ANNIVERSARY

Thirty-Four Churches Represented in Baptists' Gathering at Scotch Plains.

INTERESTING REPORTS

Preliminary Work Completed at Morning Session—Dr. Lawrence to Speak Tonight.

With 500 delegates in attendance, representing thirty-four churches in the Northern part of the State, the sixty-sixth anniversary of the East New Jersey Baptist Association began in the historic Baptist church at Scotch Plains this morning. Many of the representatives came from Newark, Elizabeth, Paterson, Jersey City, Rahway and the Oranges. The number will be largely increased this afternoon.

The convention was called to order at 10 o'clock and a devotional service was held, in charge of Rev. C. W. F. Attlee, of South Plainfield. Words of greeting were extended by Rev. T. Moore-Smith, pastor of the Scotch Plains church, and the response in behalf of the delegates was made by C. Edgar Sutphen, of the Clinton Avenue Baptist church, Newark. Mr. Sutphen was afterward elected moderator and W. F. Meyerend, also of the Clinton Avenue church, was made clerk of the session.

The committee of arrangements announced the program for the day, after which the associational sermon was delivered by Rev. Gideon M. Shott, former pastor of the church, but now of the Lyons Farms Baptist church. The principal points of his discourse were love, as the centrifugal force of Christianity; joy, as one of the first fruits of love, and the spirit of enthusiasm impelling the Christian to greater effort, which he characterized as a foretaste of Heaven, and then gentleness and patience in serving Christ.

Aside from the appointment of a committee on enrollment, no others were appointed until late this afternoon, the moderator not being able to complete his list in time. In the report of the committee on obituaries, which was presented by Rev. S. J. Skevington, of the Clinton Avenue Baptist church, Newark, it was shown that there has been 145 deaths during the past year. The average age of fifty-seven of these persons was over sixty-four; eleven were over seventy years and eight reached the age of 79½ years.

Rev. Dr. T. J. Villiers, pastor of the Peddie Memorial Baptist church, Newark, presented the report on "letters from the churches." These letters were distributed throughout the congregation and Dr. Villiers called attention to some of the more important items of interest. There was shown a steady advancement in all the Baptist churches in the association, and as Dr. Villiers expressed it, "there has been a little less of the 'just holding our own' and better results have been secured."

The report for the First Baptist church, this city, of which Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss is the pastor, showed the membership as 918, the increase, 17 by baptism, 8 by letter, and one by experience. There was a decrease of 9 by letter, 13 by death, the present membership being 957. The Park Avenue Baptist church, Rev. A. E. Finn, pastor, reported a membership of 301, the increase being 9 by baptism, 15 by letter, one by experience. The decrease was seven by letter, six by death, two by erasure, making the present membership 311.

At the close of the morning session there was a presentation of the claims of Bucknell University for more support, and the necessity of sending a representative to the Northern New Jersey Association. An adjournment was then taken until 2 o'clock for dinner. This was served in Excelsior Hall by the women of the Scotch Plains Baptist church.

The afternoon session opened with devotional service conducted by Rev. J. W. Musson, of Faith chapel; addresses, "Patriot of the Kingdom of God," Rev. J. M. Stifler, of Roselle, and Rev. S. J. Arthur, of New York. There was a report of the missionary committee, "Our Opportunities," by Rev. W. J. Fennell, of Newark, followed by minor reports. The principal feature of the evening session will be an address by Rev. Dr. William M. Lawrence, of Orange.

Must Support His Wife.

Martin J. Duffy, charged with non-support by his wife, was ordered to pay her $3 a week by Justice S. C. Mundy, of North Plainfield, last night. V. W. Nash, Jr., appeared for the overseer of the poor, who brought the action.

Strawberry Festival.

A strawberry festival will be held in Friendship Hall, New Market, tonight, by the Ladies' Aid Society of the Seventh-Day Baptist church.

COPS ON MOTOR CYCLES WILL ROUND UP AUTOS

CITY COUNCIL APPROPRIATES $300 TO BUY TWO MACHINES.

In connection with the plan of "education" started by Mayor Charles J. Fisk to curb the reckless automobile driver, Councilman Frank Randolph, chairman of the police committee, offered a resolution at the June meeting of the Common Council, last night, authorizing the purchase of two motor cycles for the use of the department. The resolution called for an expenditure of $300, Mr. Randolph explaining that one second-hand motor cycle can be purchased for $100 and a new one for $200. The resolution was adopted after further discussion in which Mayor Fisk was asked to talk on the matter.

Mr. Fisk said that modern appliances are necessary in Plainfield to get after the automobile drivers who go through the city at a terrific pace, and he suggested that the motor cycles with a speed limit of sixty miles an hour be purchased for this work. Mr. Fisk also took occasion to speak of the mounted policeman who is now on duty at certain times and explained that he is already doing good work. In the use of the motor cycles it is proposed that one be stationed on East Front street and the other on West Front street, and occasionally on Park avenue. In this way it is hoped to protect pedestrians and wagons.

Mr. Gloak spoke in support of the resolution, adding that he thought it would be money well spent. President Daniel said that if the police intended to use motor cycles it might be well to increase the city's appropriation to the hospital.

Mr. Tyler favored buying one machine, but Mayor Fisk said that while one would do a little good, it would not meet the requirements. These machines cost $225, and he thought the city would be getting a bargain by securing two for $300. All of the members, except Councilmen Hibbard and Daniel voted for the resolution and it was adopted. Chief Kiely will select the men to ride the motors.

LAST SAD RITES OVER FRED S. WHITTAKER.

Rev. Dr. E. M. Rodman Speaks of Young Man's Devotion at the Funeral Service.

The funeral of Fred Stevens Whittaker, whose death occurred in Muhlenberg Hospital following a self-inflicted bullet wound, was held in the parlor of Runyon & Son's office yesterday afternoon. It was conducted by Rev. Dr. E. M. Rodman and was attended by a gathering of friends. A trio composed of George O. Stevens, Judge Runyon and E. E. Runyon rendered "Lead Kindly Light" and "Abide With Me."

There were numerous floral tributes from neighbors and friends and in the course of his remarks, Dr. Rodman took occasion to speak of the young man's love for flowers, a liking that evidenced lofty purposes and the pure in mind and body. The clergyman also remarked that in all the years of his life's work he had not been called upon to officiate at a more sorrowful occasion, the death of Fred Whittaker showing to what extent devotion and appreciation could be carried.

Interment was made in Hillside cemetery, the pall bearers being George O. Stevens, Alexander Findlay, Thomas Timbo, William Jukes, Joseph C. Blimm and Edward Steurwald.

HAS CLIENT NON-SUITED.

Witness Brings Out Fact That Destroys Case as Presented.

On the application of the lawyer for the plaintiff, the case of Thad. Doane, Jr., a real estate agent, against Lewis C. Van Nest and his wife, for commission alleged to be due for the sale of a property on Duer street, was non-suited in the District Court this morning. The counsel, Francis J. Blatz, had the case dismissed to enable him to start it over again with an error in preparation corrected. Judge Swift, of Elizabeth, sat on the case, Judge Newcorn withdrawing because he had assisted in transferring the property.

The suit was for $82, claimed on the sale of the property at 144 Duer street. It was bought in the name of Mr. Doane, but the testimony of the second witness brought out the fact that W. B. Grannatt was associated with Mr. Doane, and had an interest in the transaction. That being so, the suit should have been brought in the names of Doane and Grannatt, and Mr. Blatz promptly secured a non-suit. S. S. Swackhamer appeared for the defense.

—Over two hundred different horses will be shown at the Horse Show next Thursday, Friday and Saturday. •••

OPENING DELAYED A DAY

Carnival Company's Tents Were Too Wet For Erection on Time.

ALREADY FOR TONIGHT

Affair Will Start In a Blaze of Light at 7:30 o'Clock This Evening —List of Committees In Charge.

Unable to get its tents up, the Hippodrome Amusement Company, which is to conduct the carvnial under the auspices of the Knights of Columbus, was compelled the put off the opening of the affair last night. The tents were so drenched that the men could not get them up, but everything will be in shape tonight, and the carnival will start in full blast. The company saw it would be unable to get things in shape on time for the announced opening, and sent a band with an announcer to make the postponement known, about town, yesterday afternoon.

Much in the way of preparation for the opening had been done by last night, however, and there is no doubt at all that everything, from the smallest attraction to the largest, will be ready by early this evening. Then ho! for a glorious opening, with music playing, lights sparkling, barkers calling, and the joyous press and hurry of a fun-loving crowd on amusement bent.

That there will be a crowd is quite certain. Last night was an earnest of that. In spite of the raw, damp weather that had chilled all the city during the day, and the announcement of the postponement, fully 2,500 people were on the grounds. Although the only lights going were the four arcs and the colored lamps on the Ferris wheel, which was being bolted into shape, the grounds had quite a gala air, and one could easily imagine what a festive and inspiriting scene would have been presented had the affair been going on as planned originally.

Free tickets in numbers sufficient to care for all those entitled to them have been set aside for the matinee tomorrow afternoon. Those who have not been provided may get passes by applying to Miss Holley, at the Charity Organization's office, 544 West Front street.

The carnival will open promptly at 7.30 o'clock. The free act will be "Zarrow's" thrilling slide for life, a sensational act in every detail.

The various committees in charge of the affair and the Knights' own attractions are as follows:

One of our clients owed $48 between four people. His salary is $14 weekly; rent $12 monthly. To have paid $2 weekly to each creditor, combined with rent, would have left only $3 per week to meet expenses, buy clothing, etc.—an impossibility you will agree. He borrowed $50, paid all his creditors, made his future credit good, if ever needed; pays his rent, the loan payments, and has $9 each week to use as his judgment dictates.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

DIAMOND DUST.

"Phil." Smith fully redeemed himself on Saturday, when he only allowed Summit one scratch hit and scored a victory for Westfield. "Phil." has the goods, but he has been slow in delivering them.

The crack pitcher, Linderman, of the Summit team, had nothing on Smith at Westfield on Saturday. He couldn't even get a hit.

Chatham will play Westfield at Recreation Park on Saturday, when "Phil." Smith will again have an opportunity to show his ability.

Jack Peacock will pitch for Dunellen as soon as he gets through at Princeton, where he is a freshman. The amateur league officials decided that he should play with Dunellen, instead of Scotch Plains.

Clinton Avenue will meet Dunellen on Crescent Oval on Saturday, and it is probable that Peacock will pitch for Dunellen.

Emery, of the Clinton Avenues, is undoubtedly the best utility man in the amateur league. He can play almost any position, as well as pitch.

The decided reversal of form displayed by the Giants is beyond understanding among the most ardent supporters of the team. They had great difficulty last week in holding their own.

The Highlanders are now going to have a season playing at home, thus giving the Eastern fans a chance to see the strong Western aggregations.

It is neither Princeton nor Cornell that is in the lead for the college championship at present, but the Brown team, which has not lost a game and which has beaten both Harvard and Yale.

West Point has a classy shortstop in Pritchett. No big leaguer has a more finished style than the soldier player.

Deshon had the hardest kind of luck on Saturday. He did not allow Harvard a single hit, yet the crimson players won the game by a score of 1 to 0, the tally being made on a battery error.

GOLF.

According to the new ratings given out by the Eastern Women's Golf Association, Mrs. N. Pendleton Rogers is given a handicap of six. There are only four women players put at scratch—Miss H. Curtis, Miss E. Curtis, Miss F. Osgood and Mrs. C. T. Stout.

The championship tournament of the Eastern Women's Golf Association will be played at Atlantic City on June 11 and 12. It will be at thirty-six holes, medal play, eighteen holes each day. On June 13 and 14 the annual tri-city match for the Griscom cup will be decided. The Boston and New York teams play first, the winners playing Philadelphia, holder of the cup. Miss Osgood is individual champion. The Atlantic City course has been put in remarkably fine condition for the tournament.

Julius E. Erickson, who is chairman of the committee having charge of the one-day open tournament for members of the Metropolitan Golf Association to be played at the Plainfield Country Club, Saturday, June 15, is already receiving entries. The chances are bright for a successful tournament with a large field of prominent players.

CHRISTIAN FIELD.

The Western Association of the Seventh-Day Baptist church will hold its convention at Nile, N. Y., June 6 to 9, and the North-Western Association wil meet at Albion, Wis., June 13-16.

For the rest of the summer the Sunday-school of Warren chapel will meet at 9:30 o'clock Sunday morning, for one hour and the morning preaching service will begin at 10:45 o'clock.

The Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the First Baptist church will meet Friday afternoon in the church parlors, instead of this afternoon, on account of the sixty-sixth anniversary meeting of the East New Jersey Baptist Association being held at Scotch Plains.

Children's Day will be celebrated at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church Sunday morning. The pastor, Rev. Dr. J. S. Zelie, will give an address to the children and the offering will be for the work of the Sunday-school and Publication Board. Children will also be presented for baptism at this service.

The children of the primary department, including the Little Beginners' Cradle Roll and Mrs. Condict's class, have been invited to their annual party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William D. Murray, 205 West Ninth street, Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. If the day is stormy the party will be held in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church parlors.

APROPROS TO THE HOLD-UP.

The action of the Common Council, last night, in holding up the brick pavement ordinance is a matter of mystery to the average Plainfielder and one that is puzzling to say the least. After the question had been practically decided upon at previous sessions and it seemed as if the way would be cleared for the improvement that is so much needed, the City Fathers suddenly underwent a change of sentiment that is about as variegated as the brand of weather handed out the past month. Hunting for the proverbial needle hidden in the haystack would be an easy task compared with trying to decide just what the councilmen want and where they stand on the proposition. It was plainly evident that several of the members were anxious to do most anything in order to get down to actual work on the pavement proposition but the majority, judging from the way they voted, will have to do a lot of thinking to locate themselves.

The question of leaving out North avenue was again broached but as has been stated before, the merchants and property owners are not in favor of this move. A canvass of the block between Park and Watchung avenues revealed the fact that leaving the present macadam and putting brick elsewhere would not be relished. It is up to the Council to see that the wishes of the people on the thoroughfare should be taken into consideration and if the body finds out where it is at, North avenue should be included.

Juniors Defeat Sophomores.

The Juniors of the Plainfield High School defeated the Sophomores yesterday on Crescent Oval by the score of 5 to 4. It was a pitchers' battle between Foster and Loizeaux, and proved a hot game throughout. The winning run was made on Rubenstein's fly to left. Loizeaux struck out nineteen men. The line-up was as follows: Juniors, Foster, p; Caldwell, c; Dutcher, 1b; Lounsbury, 2b; Rubenstein, ss; Murphy, 3b; Schofield, lf; Mortimer, cf; Titsworth, rf. Sophomores, Loizeaux, p; Doane, c; Fisher, 1b; D. Wilcox, 2b; F. Wilcox, ss; Snyder, 3b; Pryor, lf; Parsons, cf; Abbott, rf. Umpires, Rafferty and Bingaman.

Twenty-One Indictments.

The grand jury brought in twenty-one indictments this morning. It is rumored that grave charges will be considered by the jury, this afternoon, against the Elizabeth Excise Board. It was said at noon that serious results to others beside the members of the board might follow the investigation.

Seat Sale Begins.

Tickets for the second performance of "The Peasant Prince" to be given at the New Plainfield theatre, Tuesday night, June 11, were placed on sale at Schreiner's drug store this morning. Many selections were immediately made and the prospects for another big hous eare excellent.

also suggested it in his message.

Mr. Gloak expressed the opinion that in view of the fact that so large a sum is to be expended he was surprised that more citizens were not present to favor the improvement. He said that several had spoken against the proposition to pave the business streets.

Charles C. Randolph said that the Council would make no mistake in putting down brick. It is being used in Newark and in many other cities, he said, with great success. He favored it and believed that the improvement should be undertaken at once and the streets included in the ordinance be paved with brick.

Frank Randolph wanted to give Mr. Ginna all the credit possible for the time and effort expended by him in investigating the matter of permanent pavement, and he favored brick. Still, he had the same opinion as Mr. Mellick and thought it would be best to do a little at a time.

Mr. Mellick said that he favored brick and rather than have the improvement defeated would vote for all the streets.

Mr. Hibbard thought that the Common Council was planning to do too much at once. He was against the pavement of North avenue, but favored brick, believing it to be the best pavement now in use.

Mayor Fisk was given the privilege of the floor to explain some details regarding the bond issue. He said that the idea was to have it arranged so that a definite number of bonds would mature each year after 1912, so that at the end of the nineteen years they would all be paid. He considered the bonds proposed much safer than many other kinds issued by some cities.

The general discussion having about terminated, an attempt was made to take a test vote to see how the members stood on the various questions. Mr. Ginna's motion that the ordinance be adopted in the present form received the votes of Councilmen Tyler, Montgomery, C. C Randolph and Ginna, while Councilmen Daniel, F. Randolph, Hibbard, Gloak, Buxton and Mellick voted against the motion. The motion to adopt the ordinance by eliminating North avenue, resulted in a tie vote, five to five. Then another vote was taken to adopt the ordinance in the present form without change. This resulted in a tie vote on the first roll call, but when a second roll was called it was adopted by a majority of one, Councilmen Ginna, Hibbard, Mellick, C. C. Randolph, Tyler and Daniel being in favor, and Councilmen Gloak, Buxton, Montgomery and F. Randolph voting against. This being only a test vote it did not count officially.

Finally Mr. Mellick suggested that the regular session be resumed and his motion that the ordinance be put back on second reading was adopted, it being understood that the Council would meet Monday night, June 10, to further consider the ordinance with a view to putting it through.

Earlier in the evening a public hearing was granted on this ordinance and R. Henry DePew, president of the Plainfield Protective Association, spoke as an individual against the adoption of the improvement on such a large scale. He cited the many improvements proposed, the raising of salaries in the city departments, the building of new public schools, sewers and the proposition to build a city hall, all of which he said would add greatly to the tax rate. He favored permanent pavement for a limited number of the business streets and if this should prove satisfactory then it could be continued.

A letter from B. O. Bowers, of Franklin place, favoring brick pavement was read. He cited Savannah, Ga., and Nashville, Tenn., as places where the brick pavement is being used extensively and with success.

J. B. Coward, a property-owner on Park avenue, said he was against brick pavement for that street, and he did not propose to pay an assessment for such an improvement if he could help it, as he had previously paid one for the macadamizing of the street. He thought the street was good enough as it is.

Dr. A. W. Anderson, who owns property on Watchung avenue, was also against the brick pavement, adding that he could not see what benefit it would be to the property on that thoroughfare.

William R. Codington, who said that he owned property on Park avenue, expressed the opinion that he hoped the Council would find a pavement less noisy than brick. However, he thought he might get used to it. He was willing to pay his fair share of an assessment for any improvement.

Freeholders Inspect Road.

The Union County Board of Chosen Freeholders, as a committee of the whole, met at Rahway yesterday afternoon and went over St. George avenue, with a view of deciding whether or not the county should take over a certain section of the road which had been turned over to the city of Rahway some years ago by the county. The residents of Rahway made application to the board last month to have the road taken care of by the county, and the above committee was appointed to look after the matter yesterday and report back on Thursday, which is the regular meeting day of the board.

FAIR OFFICIALS WILL PAY $500 FOR AN EMBLEM.

It Must Typify the Purposes of the Great Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition.

Seattle, June 4.—The management of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, which will be held here in 1909, opening June 1 and closing October 15, is looking for an official design, and is willing to pay $500 for one that will meet with its approval.

Although many designs have been submitted since the exposition was launched, none of them have been considered suitable. The management wants a design, simple and yet effective, that will express in a glance the broad idea for which the $10,000,000 exposition will stand. The idea which the emblem will have to typify is the primary purpose of the exposition which is the exploitation of the resources and potentialities of the Alaska and Yukon territories in the United States and the Dominion of Canada, and the making known and fostering of the vast importance of the trade of the Pacific Ocean and the countries bordering upon it. In addition, the exposition withh demonstrate the marvelous progress of Western America.

All designs should be dawn just as they are expected to appear. The $500 prize is not offered for a suggestion, but for a complete drawing or painting. Designs should be sent to Henry E. Reed, director of exploitation, and marked on the cover "Official Emblem Design."

PRIZE ESSAY JUDGES.

List Announced at Meeting of the Board of Education

At the regular meeting of the city Board of Education last night, it was announced that the judges for the prize essays would be Miss Mary Willard, H. E. DeBoll and Francis Sullivan. They will pass upon the efforts of the High School students in order to award the annual prizes.

It was reported by Medical Inspectors Tomlinson and Van Horn that many of the pupils in the schools at the present time have not been vaccinated and they recommended that steps be taken to have it done. They also reported the toilet conditions at the Irving School to be in need of improvement and the matter will be taken care of at once. Three hundred and forty-six pupils were examined during the past month and the general health conditions are very good.

Mr. Lovell introduced a resolution to the effect that $2,400 be appropriated from the amount received from the sale of the Wadsworth school property and applied to the expense of grading the high school grounds. The matter of building a bicycle shed at the high school was put over until a later session.

It was reported by Dr. Maxson that all arrangements had been completed for the annual Commencement exercises.

MATAWAN CAUSEWAY CONTINUES TO SINK

JERSEY CENTRAL ENGINEERS ARE SEEKING TO FILL IN THE BOG.

Matawan, June 4.—The engineers of the Central Railroad are still at work upon the problem of filling in the causeway which runs across the meadows about midway between this place and Keyport, for the purpose of laying railroad tracks thereon to connect the two localities. Since March 1 last over 40,000 cubic yards of earth have been taken to the bog in dump cars and deposited and it is estimated that at least 10,000 cubic yards more will be needed to complete the work.

To assist in the task the engineers reinforced the earth deposits with piling which was driven into the meadow on each side, but the soft mud kept recording fast as the pressure of extra gravel loads was added.

Two weeks ago the earth seemed to be sufficiently firm to put tracks upon, but since that time the surface has dropped eight feet below the level of the approaching track. It is estimated by the engineers that the piling has been driven eighty-five feet below the surface of the meadow land. As the earth gradually sinks, bearing the track with it, it inclines with a slant toward the bay and not directly downward.

The surface of the meadow, which is comprised of many feet of thick peat, has been forced up on each side so that its height is equal to the surface of the trestle where the tracks were originally laid. These great mounds of black earth, which have been squashed up on each side, have cracked open in perpendicular lines with the track, making great yawning cracks in the earth like those caused by an earthquake. Some of these openings or cracks in the earth are large enough to conceal the bodies of ten or a dozen men. The telegraph poles alongside of the road, have been shoved many feet out of place, and the telegraph and telephone companies keep men constantly on the spot to see that they are not entirely capsized.

The space between the 'banks where the fill is being undertaken is not more than 1,000 feet, but not one-half of the fill seemingly has been accomplished as yet. Two days ago the track, which gradually has been raised as new earth was being deposited, went down four feet in as many hours.

The railroad anticipated no such trouble as this, and when the filling in became complicated they chartered a line of stages to take the passengers from the Keyport to the Matawan depot. There are a great many commuters from New York to Keyport, Keansburg and Atlantic Highlands, so that when the railroad found that this "fill" was going to take an indefinite period they abandoned the stage transportation and made a new schedule in running trains for East Long Branch, Atlantic Highlands, Keansburg, Lorillards, and Keyport by way of Branchport. This makes better accomodations for the passengers, although it takes from twenty minutes to half an hour longer to complete the trip to and from New York city.

A similar difficulty was encountered by the engineers of the New York and Long Branch Railroad while filling in just below Matawan two years ago. It was found that at least four times the amount of earth, which was originally estimated as being needed was required to complete the undertaking. The work of the present "fill" is being done under the direct supervision of Superintendent George H. Frech, of the New Jersey division of the Central Railroad, and h now believes the "fill" is thoroughly under his control, and that he will have trains running on schedule time by June 1 next.

It may seem strange that the trains have been running over this road for twenty odd years, seemingly on a firm foundation, but it is a fact that all through sections of meadow land in this State, the weight of the superstructure and trains is supported by the suction of the mud on the piling and the piling is not on a firm foundation. This is a fact which railroad engineers are fully aware of in many places around this neighborhood. The suction, which is produced by driving the piling into the wet, slimy peat and mud, is sufficiently strong to carry the heaviest trains.

Barred Firemen Out.

New York, June 4.—Although a fire was raging in the chimney of his residence, No. 4 West Fifty-sixth street, and threatened for a time to destroy rooms on the top floor, James D. Goin, a yachtsman and retired merchant, refused to allow firemen to enter his room last night and compelled them to walk around to the back entrance. He said he was afraid they would ruin his carpets and tapestries. When the firemen did put out the blaze damage amounting to $2,500 had been done.

On account of the stormy weather the special musical service planned for the First M. E. church Sunday night, was postponed to next Sunday night. At that time the cantata, "The Daughter of Jairus" and Mendelssohn's "Hear My Prayer" will be given by the combined choirs of the First M. E. church and the Westfield Presbyterian church, under the direction of J. Edmund Skiff.

NEW SYSTEM OF BUILDING.
A MARVEL IN THE SCIENCE OF CONSTRUCTION.
A method far in advance of anything formerly used in the preparation of the different parts of a house when erected in sections, making it easy to construct any design of a house, and a very superior house for all seasons, countries and climates at a great reduction in cost.

These houses are constructed principally from the best kiln dried lumber in a factory entirely protected from weather, where best high speed woodworking machines are used for cutting and shaping of every piece, reducing cost for mechanics fully one-half, making a superior house when finished.
Houses or other structures erected under this system make the warmest houses in winter, and the strongest building that can be constructed with any material, the fiercest storm fails to cause any vibration whatever. They are adapted to receive all improvements, plumbing, lighting, heating, etc., when desired.
A new method of lath and plaster is used for interior finish, making a perfect indestructable wall superior to anything ever before used.

The Mystery of Carneycroft

BY JOSEPH BROWN COOKE. COPYRIGHT 1907 BY STORY-PRESS CORPORATION

"Don't say anything more about it now, Miss Weston. I am sure you will do what is best, and though I am utterly at a loss to know what you mean, I am, of course, willing to wait a reasonable time until you are able to tell me. I will trust you without question, and in every way, but you will understand that we both owe it to Miss Carney to do away with all this mystery as soon as we can. It is spoiling her pleasure in life and ruining her property, too, and, as her friends, we must not let it continue if we can possibly put a stop to it."

"Oh, yes, I know," she said, "but we mustn't stop it now. It's too soon, Mr. Ware, and if Florence should learn the truth now it would break her heart."

"Why, what do you mean?" I exclaimed. "You surely do not expect me to believe that this affair could affect Miss Carney in any way, do you?"

"Yes," she moaned, rocking back and forth in her seat and speaking with difficulty, "it would affect her and all of us here, but me, most of all, Mr. Ware; me, most of all. When the time comes it will be easier for everybody, but nothing can be done now, or things will be even worse than they are. Oh, I do wish I could tell you what little I know about it, Mr. Ware, but I cannot, and I know that you will trust me for a few days anyway."

I walked slowly with her back to the house, and, when dinner time came and she sent down her excuses, I learned that no one in the house was aware that she had been out during the day.

Miss Carney looked pale and careworn and said that she had spent the best part of the afternoon lying down and nursing a severe headache. Mrs. Randolph seemed reticent and depressed and the meal passed off slowly and without incident.

When we rose from the table I had formulated a plan which, I thought, might relieve the situation somewhat and, apprising no one of my purpose, I set out in the direction of the Widow Bruce's cottage. It was my intention to put the matter squarely before her and ask her, not necessarily an explanation of affairs, but a friendly cooperation with me in putting an end to the annoyances she had been causing.

I had not formed a bad opinion of the woman from her appearance, and the new turn things had taken made me wonder if she, like Miss Weston, might not have been drawn into this business unwillingly and in all innocence. Moreover, I was convinced that matters were far from being as tragic as Miss Weston, in her hysterical emotion, would have me believe, for I could not conceive how a staid, respectable place like Carney-Croft could, by any possibility, be drawn into an affair that might not be satisfactorily explained in one way or another.

In a word, I had no doubt that a quiet, good-natured talk with Mrs. Bruce would accomplish all that I could wish, and I was prepared to offer her money or any other inducement that she might name if she would let the matter drop. I confess that my curiosity was greatly excited, but I was willing to forego all knowledge of the underlying facts in the case if the Bruce woman and the rest of them would only depart and leave us in peace.

I approached the cottage from the rear, coming down by a short cut through the fields and as I turned the corner of the house by the open sitting-room windows I heard a woman's voice sob out:

"Oh, I must! I must, Mrs. Bruce! I cannot live unless I do!"

Mrs. Bruce made some reply in a gentle, soothing tone of wonderful sweetness, and then she emerged from the door of the cottage with her arm affectionately around the waist of Annie Weston, who was weeping as if her heart would break. The two passed on down the little gravel walk toward the gate, while Mrs. Bruce continued to pour words of comfort into the ear of the agonized girl; and I turned and retraced my steps to the house that I might be there before Miss Weston arrived.

CHAPTER XVII.
A Vale of Tears.

By walking rapidly and taking the short path over the hill, I was able to reach the house several minutes before Miss Weston, and just in time to see Miss Carney come out of the door and peer into the darkness in a timid, hesitating way.

"Oh, it's you, Mr. Ware," she exclaimed, with a nervous little laugh. "I am so glad. I couldn't see who it was at first, and I'm in such a fidgety state to-night that I am almost ready to start at my own shadow."

She came down the steps and stood by my side, while the light from the open doorway streamed out and touched her face so softly that it poised in the surrounding darkness like some faint, angelic picture idealized by a master's hand.

"I came out to try and find Annie," she went on, "she does not answer when I rap at her door and I thought she might be here. My! what was that?" she gasped, coming closer to me and grasping my arm.

It was only an owl, for soon in the timberland and, when I told her, she laughed quietly but almost hysterically, and still clung to my side while we listened to the weird, unearthly sound that was wafted again and again to our ears from out of the blackness of the opposite river bank.

She shivered slightly and I said: "You are cold, Miss Carney. Le me get you a wrap, and then, won't you take a little walk? There's a chill in the air to-night and the exercise will do you good."

She made no reply, but looked at me gratefully, as if I had done her some great service. There was a warm woolen golf cape just inside the door, and, snatching it up, I hastened back and threw it over her shoulders, clasping it myself at her throat while she drew her hands under it and nestled comfortably in its generous folds.

We turned and walked slowly down the path under the stars, away from the house and with our backs to the road along which I knew Miss Weston would pass in another minute.

After a few moment's silence, broken only by the drowsy splashing of the river and the cheerful, friendly hum of the insect bands that make half the charm of an October night, Miss Carney said, with a contented little shrug:

"Oh, how delightfully warm and comfortable this cloak is, Mr. Ware. You always seem to know exactly what I need, for I am not nervous any more and I really believe it was nothing but the cold after all. We mustn't go far, for I ought to be looking for Annie this very minute. We can turn at the tennis court, can't we?"

"Whenever you wish," I said, with an effort, for I was becoming intoxicated with the glory of her presence and her slightest hint served me as a command.

"I really must not stay a minute longer," she murmured, almost apologetically. "Annie has had such a hard day of it and I must see if there is anything she wants. I suppose she is asleep and did not hear me tap, for I've looked everywhere for her and was just going back to her room when I saw you come out of the night like a—like—a—Oh! I mustn't say ghost, Mr. Ware! It's no longer a joke, is it?"

We had stopped at a little rustic arbor by the side of the walk and my hand rested on the trellis in front of Miss Carney. She did not speak, and I thought she was laughing softly to herself when suddenly she leaned forward and a hot tear fell on my wrist and was followed by another and another as she gave up entirely and choked with convulsive sobs.

"Why, you mustn't do this!" I exclaimed, solicitously, laying my hand instinctively on her arm and then drawing it away in a guilty fashion. "You are completely unstrung, Miss Carney. The day has been too much for you, and you need rest and quiet. Shall we go back into the house?"

"Not yet," she sobbed. "Not yet, Mr. Ware. I must not go until I have control of myself again. Oh, it is awful—awful! I don't know what I shall do!"

"Why, what is it?" I asked anxiously, as I stood helplessly by her side. "You surely haven't let this little affair of the morning take such a hold of you?"

"Oh, no—no—no—" she moaned. "I am going to tell you in a moment, just as soon as I can talk coherently. You will forgive me, won't you, Mr. Ware, but there is no one else to whom I can go, and yet I seem to do nothing but take up your time with my trials and worriments."

I led her out into the path again, thinking she would grow calmer as we walked, and she said no more until we were nearing the house, when she resumed in a plaintive tone, broken occasionally by a half-suppressed sob:

"It's about Annie, Mr. Ware, and I did not tell you at first, for I thought I could see her myself and find out what it all meant. Ever since this morning she has been walking up and down her room crying and sobbing, and this afternoon I heard her say such dreadful things that I almost feared for her reason."

"What did she say?" I asked gently.

"Oh, I hardly know," she went on, "but she seemed to be calling upon heaven to forgive her for some dreadful sin that she had committed, and she was so wrapped up in her anguish that even my knocks at the door made no impression upon her. Then she would grow more calm and only sob and moan for a time, but soon those awful words would come again and it seemed as if she would go mad. She has always been subject to occasional attacks of melancholy and when I would try to learn the cause of her trouble she would put it off as a mere fit of the blues.

"You don't mind my telling you all this, do you, Mr. Ware, for you have always helped me out of every difficulty, and it is second nature for me to turn to you now. At first I thought I could straighten it out myself, but she wouldn't even let me see her, and then, Mr. Ware, since dinner I have not heard a sound from her room and can get no response when I rap. Do you know," she whispered, touching my arm in a frightened way and shuddering as she spoke, "I can hardly bring myself to say it, but I—I—almost fear she has taken her life!"

Her eyes filled with tears again, and I lost no time in saying, reassuringly:

"You mustn't take such a gloomy view of it, Miss Carney. There's nothing to worry about, I am sure, and as to Miss Weston's having taken her life I can promise you most positively that she not only has done nothing of the sort, but that no such idea has ever entered her mind."

"I knew you would cheer me up as you have always done," she exclaimed gratefully, "but how can you be so certain about Annie, Mr. Ware? Remember, you don't know her as well as I do."

"Look!" I replied, pointing to a window of Miss Weston's room, and there, in the full glow of the lamp within, she sat at a table writing rapidly.

Miss Carney gave a glad little cry and started away toward the house, but turned in an instant and extended her hand, saying:

"You have cheered me up, Mr. Ware, just as I knew you would. Thank you so much, and—good night."

As her hand lay in mine she turned it until its back was uppermost and then raised it slightly. I had already been sorely tempted, but this was more than I could bear, and, bending forward, I touched it lightly and reverently with my lips.

"Good night," she repeated, softly, "and thank you again."

I watched her until she had disappeared into the house and then I turned and walked miles and miles over the deserted country roads, my head bowed down and my mind nearly dazed. When I returned to the house the cold gray morning light was breaking in the eastern sky.

LANEHART WILL A FORGERY.

Chancellor Magie Affirms Somerset Orphans' Court.

Somerville, June 4.—Chancellor William Magie, yesterday, affirmed the decision rendered by Judge Louis H. Schenk, in the Somerset Orphans' Court, that the alleged will of the late William Lanehart, executed and filed for probate by William H. Skillman, former president of the New Jersey Horticultural Society, which bequeaths Skillman one-half of the Lanehart estate, valued at $20,000, is a forgery.

The case was taken to the Court of Chancery several months ago. Skillman has since been indicted and tried in the Somerset Court on a criminal charge for forging the will. The jury in the case failed to agree, and startling revelations followed. Prosecutor Reger accused Deputy Sheriff Anderson with influencing several of the jurors in behalf of Skillman.

That official and Constables Dennis Wyckoff and Ambrose Mantz were found guilty of contempt of court for their suspicious actions while the jury was deliberating, and they will be called before the court on June 10 to show cause why sentence shall not be passed. It is believed that the decision of Chancellor Magie will have an important bearing in the criminal action when Skillman is again brought up for trial.

One of our clients owed $48 between four people. His salary is $14 weekly; rent $12 monthly. To have paid $2 weekly to each creditor, combined with rent, would have left only $3 per week to meet expenses, buy clothing, etc.—an impossibility you will agree. He borrowed $50, paid all his creditors, made his future credit good, if ever needed; pays his rent, the loan payments, and has $6 each week to use as his judgment dictates.

'PLAINS AND FANWOOD.

The sixty-sixth annual meeting of the East New Jersey Baptist Association held yesterday in the Scotch Plains Baptist church was brought to a close with the evening service at 7:30. The service opened with a short prayer and praise service led by Rev. George B. Leonard. At 8 o'clock miscellaneous business was transacted, after which Rev. Dr. William M. Lawrence made the address of the evening. The service was attended by over 300 delegates and Baptist workers and was one of the best meetings of the day, but few of the delegates returning to their homes until the meeting was over. Dinner and supper was furnished in Excelsior Hall by the Ladies' Circle of the church, under the direction of its president, Mrs. J. H. Parks, nearly 400 being fed. The convention was one of the largest attended the association has held in years.

The local rooters should follow the team to Bound Brook, Saturday afternoon, when they meet Bound Brook on its own diamond. Nothing will encourage a team to play ball like a few familiar faces about the diamond.

Rev. G. M. Shott, formerly pastor of the Baptist church, but now pastor of the Lyons Farms church, was hurrying about town yesterday, during the intermission of the association meeting, renewing old acquaintances.

The main streets in town presented a Broadway appearance yesterday with the four hundred Baptist delegates and workers who were attending the association meeting.

"Billy" Lee's bowling alleys, which have been out of commission since the fire, have been repaired and bowling is again being enjoyed by the knights of the pins.

Invitations are out for the commencement exercises of the public school which will be held in the Baptist church, Wednesday night, June 13.

Mrs. Charlotte Hurley and son, Cecil, of Brooklyn, were the guests yesterday of Mrs. W. R. Buckley, of Front street.

Mr. and Mrs. Carmon A. Hetfield, who have been visiting friends in town, have returned to their home in Brooklyn.

Mrs. John George and son, of Rahway, were the guests yesterday of her sister, Miss Harriett M. Squiers.

NEW SYSTEM OF BUILDING.

A MARVEL IN THE SCIENCE OF CONSTRUCTION.

A method far in advance of anything formerly used in the preparation of the different parts of a house when erected in sections, making it easy to construct any design of a house, and a very superior house for all seasons, countries and climates at a great reduction in cost.

These houses are constructed principally from the best kiln dried lumber in a factory entirely protected from weather, where best high speed woodworking machines are used for cutting and shaping of every piece, reducing cost for mechanics fully one-half, making a superior house when finished.

Houses or other structures erected under this system make the warmest houses in winter, and the strongest building that can be constructed with any material, the fiercest storm fails to cause any vibration whatever. They are adapted to receive all improvements, plumbing, lighting, heating, etc., when desired.

A new method of lath and plaster is used for interior finish, making a perfect indestructable wall superior to anything ever before used.

WHAT THE KIDNEYS DO.

Their Unceasing Work Keeps Us Strong and Healthy.

All the blood in the body passes through the kidneys once every three minutes. The kidneys filter the blood. They work night and day. When healthy they remove about 500 grains of impure matter daily, when unhealthy some part of this impure matter is left in the blood. This brings on many diseases and symptoms—pain in the back, headache, nervousness, hot, dry skin, rheumatism, gout, gravel, disorders of the eyesight and hearing, dizziness, irregular heart, debility, drowsiness, dropsy, deposits in the urine, etc. But if you keep the filters right you will have no trouble with your kidneys.

Mrs. Julia Hynes, of 523 Sixth street, Plainfield, N. J., says: "For nearly a year I was suffering with a severe pain in the loins, or what is generally called backache. I was also afflicted with a stiffness or lameness of the limbs and the kidney secretions were highly colored and contained some sediment. Any remedies that I took to clear up the kidney secretions and rid me of my aches and pains did me apparently no good or benefit. I heard of Doan's Kidney Pills doing so much for people suffering as I was, and began using them, getting a supply at Randolph's drug store. Though at first I saw no change in my condition, I soon began to have less pain in my back and my limbs were not stiff any more. I kept right on with the pills and took them several months, with the result that they cured me of my trouble and I am glad to endorse them."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

DIAMOND DUST.

The amateur league games scheduled for Saturday are Dunellen at Crescent Oval against Clinton Avenue, and Scotch Plains at Bound Brook. Y. M. C. A. will have an off-day.

Dunellen will be strengthened for its game with Clinton Avenue on Crescent Oval. It is expected that Jack Peacock, of this city, a freshman at Princeton, will pitch for the visitors, and some changes will be made in the in and outfield.

The Clinton Avenue team is rounding into form very fast and from now on will be an important factor in the league race. The members of the team are determined to reach first place if good, hard playing will accomplish it.

The Cincinnatis have been the chief trouble makers for the Chicagoes, having accounted for nearly one-half of the Cubs' defeats.

If the Cubs can play only eight of their thirty-nine games away from home and lose only nine of them, the arithmetical problem comes home, can any team hustle hard enough to beat them?

Jake Weimer lost his first game Monday after rejoining the Cincinnatis, but he pitched good enough to win under ordinary conditions.

Fred Glade won five straight games for the Browns from May 11 to 30, inclusive, holding his opponents to the small total of eight runs.

Although Hans Wagner is one of the biggest men in the National League he is also one of the fastest men on bases.

Now that the Highlanders are going to stay at home for awhile they should be able to recover lost ground if it is in the team.

The Paterson Club, of the Hudson River League, has disbanded, owing to bad weather, which has caused a heavy loss to the club. The same action has been taken regarding the Kingston Club, of the same league. Manager Ryan, of the latter club, lost about $2,000 and but few games were played.

GOLF.

At the annual meeting of the Eastern Professional Golfers' Association Monday it was voted to hold the second championship meeting at the Country Club of Brookline, Boston, during October, if the club will agree the course. The inaugural tournament took place last fall at the Forest Hill Field Club. Aleck Smith won the championship and there was keen interest in all of the competitions. There was a small attendance but several had proxies from members in Boston, Philadelphia, Washington and throughout New England. The slate named by the nominating committee was broken and new men elected to the offices. George Low, re-nominated as president, refused to again serve, and Will Norton, the nominee for treasurer, succeeded to the place. Jack Hobens gained the vice-presidency, upsetting the nomination of Donald J. Ross. Alex. Finlay declined the nomination for secretary, and Charles Kirchner was re-elected. The blank for the treasurer's berth, caused by the promotion of Will Norton, gave an opening for the unanimous election of Dave Hunter. Stewart Gardner, last year's treasurer, is now the professional at the Exmoor, Ill., Country Club. There were no changes in the nominations for committeemen. The ticket as elected was: President, Willie Norton, Deal Golf Club; vice-president, Jack Hobens, Englewood Golf Club; secretary, Charles Kirchner, Plainfield; treasurer, Dave Hunter, Essex County Country Club. Executive Committee, George Strath, Crescent A. C.; Alec. Campbell, Country Club of Brookline; Donald Ball, Philadelphia Cricket Club; C. A. W. Fox, Hartsdale; Thomas Anderson, Montclair Golf Club; J. S. Pearson, Richmond County Country Club; Isaac Mackie, Fox Hills Golf Club.

Entries are constantly being received for the one-day open tournament to be held at the Plainfield Country Club on Saturday, June 15, and for the first time in the history of the local club enthusiasts will have an opportunity of seeing some of the best players in the country. There will be six prizes, aggregating $160. The entries are being received by Julius E. Erickson, chairman of the committee on the tournament.

"Marty" O'Loughlin, the "pro," is getting in some fine work these days on the Plainfield Country Club course. He is in top form and should be able to smash a record or two this season in the various tournaments in which he will play.

The first round match play for the June handicap cup will be one of the events at the Plainfield Country Club on Saturday. There are several contestants to play off tie scores before they qualify for Saturday's competition. The Class A and Class B players will compete against each other.

Plainfield, N. J., June 5, 1907.

In noting the fact that Plainfield's fourth annual horse show commences tomorrow, too much credit cannot be given the members of the Riding and Driving Club who have been instrumental in making an exhibition of this nature an established feature in the city. The Plainfield show is now recognized as the third most important in the eastern circuit, those at Madison Square Garden and Philadelphia being the only ones to exceed it in entries and general standing. To bring this about inside of four years required an unlimited expenditure of time and money and it has been done by an organization with no thought of personal gain. The city as a whole is reaping the profit and the advertising Plainfield gets is the sort that is envied by every other town and hamlet in the State. The show in itself is not the exclusive affair that some have imagined and this year the club has offered every inducement for the lover of horses to attend the exhibition and view the costliest string of blooded equines that has ever been brought to the city.

The death of Judge A. Q. Garretson will cause Governor Stokes to make an appointment to fill the vacancy pending the reassembling of the Legislature. Whoever he appoints for the brief period will be his nominee for approval by the Senate. It is taken for granted at Trenton that Justice Garretson having been a Democrat, will be succeeded by a member of the same party, and about the only name prominently mentioned is that of State Senator James F. Minturn, of Hudson county. For some time it seems to have been generally believed the Hudson Senator would be put on the bench the next time it was the turn for a Democrat.

LARGE ATTENDANCE AT FUNERAL OF R. A. PERINE.

American Bank Note Company Suspended Business in Respect to His Memory.

The funeral of Robert A. Perine was held yesterday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. H. C. Deknatel, of Belvidere avenue, at 2.45 o'clock. There was a very large attendance of relatives and friends, including a large representation of former business associates from the American Bank Note Company, where for forty years Mr. Perine was superintendent. For the first time in the history of the concern, its place of business closed at noon yesterday out of respect to Mr. Perine. There were a great many beautiful floral tributes, including several from the officials of the American Bank Note Company.

The service was conducted by Rev. E. Vicar Stevenson, rector of Grace church, and the interment was in Hillside cemetery. The honorary pall-bearers were John Currier, of Newark; George Wharton Edwards, of Plainfield; Frank Tarbell and Jacob Meurer, of Brooklyn; Charles Austin Bryan, of New York; and Ellis Ainley, of Hackensack.

BAPTIST MEETING ENDS

that today a State or United States Senator is answerable to the conscience of a State and this had been found true also in the case of New York State where they have a Baptist Governor.

Dr. Lawrence also spoke of the great influx of foreigners to this State and asked the question as to who is going to influence these people. "New Jersey," he said is the bed-room of New York, and the place where Philadelphians pass through on their way to New York. What are the Baptists doing to advance their interests? Nothing. When I went to the Oranges, it made me weary to meet so many people who had at one time been members of the Baptist church, but had since identified themselves with some other denomination. I found the Oranges to be a resting place for saints and a refuge for sinners. In conclusion Dr. Lawrence urged all to lift their eyes to God and look down at the harvest which is always ready for the workers.

NEEDS OF THE LIBRARY

believe that in the course of the next year the library should spend on books at least $2,500, and we have accordingly entered this item in our proposed budget.

"Your committee recommend the publication and circulation, amongst factory operatives and others likely to be interested, of a list of books and magazines on engineering owned by the library; also the publication of our list of 'Fine Arts' in an edition of say three hundred and fifty copies. Your committee believe it wise to inform the reading public in this way from time to time, as means are available for such purpose, of such material as we possess to aid in study and research. We estimate that the $500 proposed to be set aside for 'stationery and printing' will cover the cost of a suitable annual report and of the lists herein suggested—besides providing needed stationery.

"We cannot reasonably complain of a lack of public sympathy and appreciation so long as we are not taking measures to inform our friends and constituents of library conditions. Lack of means has prevented the publication of reports of our work. Your committee believe that it is wise to publish a general report, giving all facts of interest in connection with the Plainfield Public Library and Reading Room.

"Touching the subject of vacations of employes, specially referred to your committee, they consider that for this year the librarian and assistant librarian should each have one month's vacation. Their work has been arduous and responsible, and to this extent we believe the board would be justified in giving them a period of rest. In the case of other employes the recommendation of the librarion of three weeks and two weeks respectively may be carried out.

"Your committee do not favor changes or readjustment in the staff at present. The less responsible assistants should be given all reasonable opportunity to acquire fitness for more advanced work.

"Respectfully submitted,
"L. V. F. RANDOLPH,
J. HERBERT CASE,
MASON W. TYLER."

PRICE OF LAMB RISES AND BEEF IS BULLISH.

Scarcity in Juvenile Sheep; Beeves Are Fewer, Too, Say the Wholesalers.

With lamb increased in price, and beef threatening to go up, the thrifty housewife is again in the throes of a readjustment of domestic economies. Lamb will cost the consumer five or six cents a pound more for the desirable cuts, and beef shows symptoms of advancing proportionately.

Lambs were raised in price by the wholesalers this week, the advance corresponding to the increase to the consumer. The butchers are compelled to advance, because their margin of profit can't stand the burden.

Lambs are scarce, it is said, and that, together with the high prices they command, is responsible for the advance. Lambs are higher than they have been in years. Speaking of the increase, this morning, Harry Vail, who is in charge of the Union Beef Company, in the absence of R. I. Tolles, said that injustice has been done the management of the company in the statement published Monday to the effect that the advance in lamb was too slight to notice and wouldn't affect retail buyers. He said nobody made any statement with authority to speak for the company.

Beef, it was said, showed a tendency to rise. Good beef was scarce, and commanded high prices.

FIFTH ANNIVERSARY.

Plainfield Trust Company Observes the Occasion.

The Plainfield Trust Company celebrated its fifth anniversary yesterday, having commenced business on June 4, 1902, and in honor of the event has issued an attractive souvenir which has been sent to the patrons and friends of the institution. Those who have failed to receive one can get the same by calling at the banking house on Park avenue.

The increase in the company's deposits has been rapid, amounting today to two and a quarter millions of dollars, while the number of depositors is 4,000, or about one in every six of Plainfield's population. The company has paid to depositors $150,000 in interest, the surplus and undivided profits have been increased to $150,000, and since beginning business the company has erected a fine bank building, complete in every respect.

Miss Harriet Shreve, of Grove street, has gone to Philadelphia and Bryn Mawr to visit friends.

JUDGE GARRETSON DIES AFTER BRIEF ILLNESS.

Stricken With Pneumonia, Passes Away at His Morristown Home.

Abraham Quick Garretson, Justice of the Supreme Court of New Jersey, died Monday night in his Morristown home from pneumonia after an illness of only two days. He was sixty-five years of age and leaves a son, two daughters and his widow. Fatal termination of his illness was unexpected by his physician and family until only a few hours prior to death. Mrs. Garretson and their children were gathered in the Glen road homestead when Judge Garretson died.

Since the death of Judge Lippincott, in 1900, Judge Garretson has been a member of the Supreme Bench and from 1878 to 1883 he was President Judge of the Hudson County court of Common Pleas. Born in Franklin township, March 11, 1842, Judge Garretson was a descendant of two of the earliest settlers of Somerset county, both of Holland stock. Martin Garretson and Ann Quick were his parents, the former serving in the Revolutionary War with the rank of colonel.

Entering Rutgers College as a sophomore in 1859, Mr. Garretson was graduated at the head of his class with the degree of master of arts and subsequently studied in the Harvard Law School and in the office of Abraham Zabriskie, afterwards Chancellor of New Jersey. He began active practice in 1865.

It was Judge Garretson who occupied the bench at Somerville during the George Wood murder trial and passed sentence of thirty years upon the defendant.

The MYSTERY of CARNEYCROFT

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Recall of the Wanderer.

I did not come down to breakfast next day, and when luncheon was served Miss Carney remained away to be with Miss Weston, who was confined to her room, if not to her bed.

At dinner, which was a formal affair in honor of the rector and his wife, Miss Carney greeted me cordially and unaffectedly, but, beyond an evanescent flush that lighted up her face, and vanished as quickly as it came, she gave no sign that my temerity of the night before had made the slightest impression upon her mind. She was superbly gowned, and her manner, while natural and entirely unconstrained, impressed me as being in a way, unusually thoughtful and serious; yet at times her face fairly glowed with the contented, satisfied expression of one whose cup of happiness was filled and overflowing.

I knew what it meant, for I could no longer hide the truth from myself if I would, and yet I even then strove to devise a plan by which I could take myself away and out of her life so that in time her heart would again be free.

I did this in good faith, for, realizing my unworthiness as I did and knowing well that many circumstances had conspired to give her an exalted opinion of me and my abilities, which, otherwise, she never would have reached, I felt it my duty to step aside and not stand in the way of the far greater conquest that she was surely destined to make.

No tongue can tell the extent to which I regretted my act of temporary weakness on the previous evening, and I cursed my indiscretion in taking advantage of her hour of sorrow and despair when I should have been strong enough to withstand the tempter, if only by virtue of the great and ever increasing magnitude of my devotion. That she knew it now there could be no doubt, and I knew with equal certainty that she returned my love with all the ardor of her great warm heart.

Mr. Arthur Sedgewick, the rector, proved to be a jovial sort of an individual, of the florid type and port wine complexion, while his wife was a demure little woman who regarded him with unconcealed admiration and whose greatest satisfaction in life was derived from half-stifled exclamations of mock horror at his constant unconventional sallies and jests.

"So you saw all the plays in New York?" he asked, as the conversation imperceptibly took a theatrical turn.

"Oh, yes!" exclaimed Miss Carney, in almost her childish enthusiasm. "We went every night and to all the matinees, too. We had not been in an English-speaking country in so long that we fairly reveled in theater and we even saw Maud Adams four times."

"You like her, then," I remarked, for want of something better to say, but feeling it my duty to show an interest clearly at variance with the true object of my thoughts.

"Now, Mr. Ware, that is altogether too bad!" returned Miss Carney, in an obviously assumed tone of badinage. "You said that in exactly the way that the traveler at sea greeted his roommate one morning, when he observed politely, but with about as much enthusiasm as you yourself have just shown, 'Good morning, old man, I hope you are well; not that I care a rap, but just to start the conversation!'"

The rector's wife looked properly shocked, while her liege lord laughed uproariously and cried:

"I heard that story when I was in college, Miss Carney, but unless my memory fails me, the wording was somewhat different."

"I expurgated it for your especial benefit, sir," returned Miss Carney solemnly and then, in reply to my question, she added:

"I think Miss Adams is just too sweet and dainty for anything. Is it really true that she is married?"

"It has been rumored that she is married to her manager," I replied, "but I hardly think it possible, for they are almost never together. You know, she spends her summers in Massachusetts while he is in London, and, just as soon as he returns in the autumn, she always starts for the west with the 'Little Minister—'"

"Mercy!" exclaimed the rector's wife, in unfeigned astonishment, while we all laughed in spite of ourselves, and the reverend gentleman fell into a violent fit of coughing and dropped his fork on the floor. When the general levity caused by my remark had subsided somewhat, and he was able to speak, he explained: "The 'Little Minister,' my dear, is a play, and not a man. I must take you to see it the next time we are in town."

"Is it a biblical play?" asked Mrs. Sedgewick with interest.

"Oh, dear, no," replied Miss Carney. "Just the ordinary sort of a play, with a man and a woman and a whole lot of pathos and comedy sandwiched in and spread around. But it is very sweet and enjoyable. Haven't you read the book?"

"No," returned Mrs. Sedgewick seriously. "I am so absorbed in E. P. Roe's works just now that I haven't time for anything else. Don't you think he is a wonderful writer?"

"I'm ashamed to confess that I've never read him at all," said Miss Carney sweetly, "but I hope to, some day, however."

"Mrs. Sedgwick thinks that I only care for biblical plays," broke in the rector, hurriedly, as if to forestall any discussion of his wife's favorite author, "and I do think that good productions of that sort should be encouraged and supported. The stage and the pulpit go hand in hand in educating the masses, and plays that direct the mind toward nobler things are worthy of every commendation and the approval of all good citizens. Many a man, who never gave a thought to the Bible, has been led to a careful study of the Scriptures after witnessing a stirring drama founded on Scriptural history and presented with proper regard to accuracy and detail."

"I am sure that is so!" exclaimed Miss Carney, as a mischievous light came into her eyes. "I remember once, when we were coming away from a most intensely interesting production of 'Ben-Hur,' overhearing two people engaged in a heated discussion as to whether the Book of Hezekiah was historical or prophetical. I don't suppose the thought had ever entered their heads before, and I have always meant to look it up myself, but I have never done so. Won't you tell me about it, Mr. Sedgewick?"

"Hezekiah — Hezekiah," mused the rector, puckering up his forehead and rubbing his chin thoughtfully. "You know that is a book to which we seldom refer, but—er—strictly speaking, Miss Carney, I feel that it should be regarded—er—in the main as—er—historical—although some authorities do—er—I believe—er—claim—er—"

A merry laugh from Miss Carney interrupted this learned speech and her roguish eyes fairly beamed with glee at the momentary discomfiture of her guest, who had recovered himself in an instant and exclaimed:

"I am afraid you are incorrigible, Miss Carney, but I did not think you would be so cruel to me of all persons."

Miss Carney returned his good natured smile and said, apologetically:

"I expected you would refer me to Mr. Ware for my answer or I shouldn't have dared to be so rude, but I thought it only courteous to put the question to you first of all."

As soon as dinner was over she excused herself for a moment to visit Miss Weston and then joined the other ladies in the drawing-room, leaving Mr. Sedgewick and me to our cigars and benedictine. I fear I made a poor companion, for my thoughts were far away and I realized that, like myself, but with greater success, Miss Carney had been wearing an air of forced gaiety and good spirits all the evening.

I was heartily glad when the guests were ready to leave, and, although I was tired from my practically sleepless night, I wandered disconsolately about the place until nearly ten, when I seated myself in a quiet corner of the veranda to smoke a small cigar before retiring to my room. My brain was so overwhelmed with the realization that my heart's desire lay within my reach that I sat in a stupidly dazed sort of way revolving the matter slowly in my mind and trying to determine the proper course to pursue.

My cigar was nearly burned out and I was on the point of going to my room when a shadow fell across the railing in front of me and Miss Carney stood by my side.

"I wondered if you would be here," she said, nervously. "I wanted to see you, for there is something I forgot to say to you last night."

She had slipped a long coat of dainty brocaded stuff over her dinner dress and, as she stood in the light of the drawing-room window, she made a picture worthy the brush of the greatest genius that ever lived.

"I won't sit down, thank you," she continued, interlocking her fingers and playing with her rings as if greatly agitated. "You know, Annie is growing steadily worse, and the doctor from the village says she must have a nurse, so I have telegraphed for two to come at once. Oh! I thought that dinner would never end."

She seemed to feel the chilliness of the night air, but, declining my offer to get her an additional wrap, she drew the fur trimmed collar of her cloak more closely about her neck, and went on hurriedly:

"You remember I once told you that Annie and Jack, my brother, had some sort of a disagreement just before he went away and that he left this country because of it. Well, Annie told me some time ago that I was entirely wrong in my understanding of the matter, and I have wanted to tell you all about it so many times, only I could never bring myself to speak of it."

"Phil." Smith Signs With Newark.

"Phil." Smith, who has regained his old-time form as a twirler, signed with the Newark Eastern League Club, today, and will probably pitch his first game for Newark against Montreal on Friday or Saturday. A clause in his contract stipulates that he is not to play Sunday ball. "Phil." started in this season with the Elizabeth Atlantic League team, but on account of bad weather and slight trouble with his arm, he had poor success. He finally left that club and last Saturday pitching for Westfield, he showed up in rare form shutting Summit out by a score of 1 to 0, allowing the visitors but one scratch hit. This attracted the attention of Manager Burnham, of the Newarks, and he decided o give the lad a trial.

George Carlton Comstock, appeared as attorney for the receiver.

Bidders Have Narrow Escape.

While the administrator's sale was in progress at the home of the late Charles Opdyke, on Watchung avenue, yesterday, the large crowd adjourned to the parlor. The combined weight was too much for the floor and it sagged several inches. For few minutes there was great excitement among the bidders, but the presence of mind of those in charge of the sale quickly prevented a panic. It was impossible to conclude the sale yesterday and it will be continued tonight.

SECOND ATTEMPT AT SUICIDE PROVES SUCCESSFUL

DETERMINED TO DIE

Joseph Wiedoson, the Alton farmer who was sent to the State asylum at Morris Plains, May 25, suffering from suicidal mania, succeeded in killing himself at the institution, Tuesday night. Word of his death was telephone yesterday afternoon by the asylum authorities to Chief of Police Patrick S. Kiely, who took him to the place.

When Wiedoson went to the asylum he had barely recovered from the effect of terrible wounds that he inflicted on himself with an ax about a month ago, in an attempt at self-destruction. In that attempt he turned the edge of the ax on himself and struck with all his might at the front of his head. The edge inflicted a gash that penetrated partly into the skull, and he fell unconscious over the weapon. He made the attempt in a woodshed, and lay undiscovered for hours. He was almost dead when found, and the doctors at Muhlenberg Hospital, this city, to where he was hurried, despaired of his life. To their amazement he rallied from the shock and the loss of blood, and recovered rapidly. They say it was one of the most remarkable recoveries that ever occurred at the institution.

Wiedoson came through that experience with his determination to die unshaken. He told the doctors that he would kill himself at the first opportunity that presented itself, by any means that lay at hand. He was closely watched, and as soon as his condition permitted he was sent to the asylum.

Early Tuesday night he was left alone in his room for a few minutes. As soon as the nurse had left Wiedoson jumped upon a table and dove, with his head straight down, to the floor. He struck, as he undoubtedly planned, squarely on the old wound. The skull was crushed in, and he died in a few minutes.

Dr. Evans, head of the asylum staff, tried to get into communication with Wiedoson's wife at the farm in Alton, but failed to get a response to his messages. Early yesterday afternoon he called Chief Kiely on the telephone and asked him to locate Mrs. Wiedoson. The chief learned that she was in Elizabeth, arranging legal matters connected with the farm. He found her son, and sent him to the railroad station to meet his mother as she returned from Elizabeth and bring her to police headquarters.

Mrs. Wiedoson was prostrated by the news. She had thought there was no possibility of her husband accomplishing his suicidal purpose at the asylum, and was hopeful of his recovery under treatment there.

Wiedoson's mind was unhinged by brooding over money he felt he had lost in buying the farm at Alton. He became dissatisfied with the property, and sold it for $5,000 less than he paid for it. He had the property only a short time.

Undertaker George Cole brought the body from Morris Plains last night. The funeral will be held privately tomorrow. The burial will be at Hillside cemetery.

NEW PLAN SUGGESTED TO SUPPORT HOSPITAL

SPECIAL COMMITTEE PROPOSES TO HAVE EVERY CITIZEN CONTRIBUTE.

The Board of Governors of Muhlenbeg Hospital held a special meeting at the Casino, last night, to receive and approve the proposition of a special committee of which George A. Beaton is chairman, the purpose of which is to secure the support of every person in Plainfield, so far as possible, toward the maintenance of Muhlenberg Hospital. The plan is similar to that of the "Mercy League," and it is proposed to make a house to house canvass of the city, so that it will be known definitely who has been and who is not contributing to the hospital.

The committee, which will act independently of the Board of Governors, will employ a paid secretary and paid canvassers, who will give their time to this work. The idea is to have everybody contribute something from a penny to any amount they feel able to give. Different colored cards will be used so that there will be no mixup or confusion among those who contribute.

The plan was received enthusiastically by the Board of Governors and was unanimously approved. This will take the matter of securing a systematic plan of support for the hospital out of the hands of the Board of Governors, the committee assuming the responsibility in this respect.

CAPT. AND MRS. PARKER OBSERVE GOLDEN WEDDING.

Celebration at Their Home in Perth Amboy Attended by Large Gathering of Friends.

Capt. and Mrs. James Parker, who are former residents of this city, celebrated their golden wedding Monday night at the historic Parker Castle in Perth Amboy. They were married fifty years ago at Norfolk, Va., where Mrs. Parker was Miss Kate McLean, a reigning belle when claimed as a bride by Lieutenant Parker, U. S. N. A family party helped Captain and Mrs. Parker observe the event and there were present a bridemaid and the best man of the wedding a half a century ago. The former was Mrs. C. H. Coburn, a sister of Mrs. Parker, and the latter Rear-Admiral Thomas Williamson, U. S. N.

The guests included Cortland Parker, of Newark, an uncle of Captain Parker, Mrs. George J. Carney, a sister of Mrs. Parker; Miss L. B. Parker, and Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Dunderdale, sister of Captain Parker; James Parker, of Wilmington, N. C., and Andrew McLean Parker, of Plainfield, sons of Captain and Mrs. Parker, and Mrs. B. B. Lainer, Mrs. Robert S. Huse and Mrs. F. E. Dubois, their daughter, were also present as were many grandchildren.

Mission Band Aids Dr. Grenfell.

The Boys' Mission Band of the Crescent Avenue church has just sent a large box of men's, women's and children's clothing, to be distributed among the needy people of Dr. Grenfell's Labrador mission. The contents of the box also included a number of articles for hospital use, and a considerable amount of entertaining literature. A very conservative estimate of the value of the entire box, places it at $113 but it will be worth much more than that, to the destitute people to whom it is sent. The thanks of the Boys' Band are here expressed to the many friends who so generously contributed money or clothing.

No Hunt Club Meeting Yet.

No meeting of the officers of the Watchung Hunt Club has been held since the steeplechase meet on Thursday and Saturday, of last week, and there will be none until next week, the time fixed to settle up all accounts in connection with the meet. There was a report that the club held a meeting Tuesday night in town and that an adjournment was taken until yesterday, when the officials were to gather in New York and discuss matters relative to certain charges that have been made against the club as to book-making, etc.

Exercises at Groszmann School.

Term exercises will be held at the Groszmann School for Nervous and Atypical Children, "Watchung Crest," Saturday afternoon, June 15, from 3 to 5 o'clock. The program will consist of songs, recitations, essays, calisthenics and dramatic representations. The idea will be, not only to express the actual daily work of the school, but to illustrate child life in its divers manifestations. There will be an exhibition of pupils' work which will be kept open the following week.

ANNUAL RECEPTION AT CHILDREN'S HOME

MANY FRIENDS OF THE ASSOCIATION ATTEND THE AFFAIR.

The third annual reception of the Children's Home Association was held at the Home on Jackson avenue, yesterday afternoon. While the attendance was large, nearly one hundred members and friends of the association being present, the bad weather kept a great many away. The Home was beautifully decorated with the season's flowers and those present had a delightful social time in addition to listening to an excellent program of music.

The children sang several selections and then the program was presented by Miss Campbell, who gave whistling solos, accompanied by Miss Margaret Leal; Mrs. George S. Ring sang two numbers, accompanied by Miss Cornelia Hyatt and Miss McCutchen and Miss Marion McCutchen played and sang. The different numbers were well received and afforded the children great pleasure.

Mrs. M. E. Kimball, president of the association, together with the Board of Managers received the guests and showed them about the Home.

A HOME WEDDING.

Miss Harriet Currie Becomes the Wife of Frederick L. Deyo.

Miss Harriet Currie, of Arlington avenue, and Frederick Lawrence Deyo, also of this city, were quietly married at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Percy VanAlstyne, of West Fourth street. The guests included the relatives and near friends. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Charles L. Goodrich, of the Congregational church. An informal reception followed, during which supper was served. The bride received many gifts.

Mrs. Deyo is well known in a large circle of friends. Mr. Deyo holds a position in the New York office of Manning, Maxwell & Moore. The couple will reside in Brooklyn.

Presented With Handsome Gown.

Through her sister-in-law, Miss Hannah Counihan, who visited in this city recently, Mrs. W. J. Counihan, has been presented with a handsome Japanese gown to be worn by her in the Japanese number of "The Peasant Prince," next Tuesday night. The gown is the gift of Harry Deakin, head of the Deakin art rooms of Chicago and Japan, and is valued at several hundred dollars. Miss Counihan is manager of the Chicago rooms.

Dinner to George Tobin.

Hightstown friends of George A. Tobin, of this city, gave a dinner in his honor Tuesday night, at Hightstown. M. G. Hoyt was among the guests. A few Republican politicians attended the dinner, over which "Davy" Baird, of Camden, presided as toastmaster. Senator Briggs was among the guests. One J. E. Mitchell, of Millville, boomed Baird for Governor.

Successor to Miss Venner.

As yet no successor has been appointed by the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital to take the place of Miss Venner, the assistant matron, who resigned, but it is said that Miss Griffin, one of this year's graduate nurses, will fill the position. Miss Venner has gone to New York for the present.

LIVELY AT THE CARNIVAL

Knights of Columbus Enterprise Draws 5,000 People Out Again.

ELKS AND EAGLES HELP

Fraternities Send Delegations of Boomers to Assist in Making the Affair a Noteworthy Success.

Another big crowd attended the Knights of Columbus carnival last night. The dampness and the raw edge to the atmosphere did not seem to affect the carnival spirit, and the 5,000 or more pleasure-seekers kept the tents and the open-air attractions buzzing with activity.

Eagles and Elks were in evidence about the grounds. It was fraternity night, and members of those two orders sent goodly delegations to help boom the affair along. The Eagles marched down in a body, with a drum corps. They did great work about the various attractions.

The general committee is now keeping tabs on the profits that will accrue to the council from the affair. The opening night turned in a sum that wiped out all the expense account of the Knights, and their share of the receipts from now on will be "velvet." A nice sum is in sight.

Everything was going on the grounds last night. The few minor attractions that were not ready for the opening, and the merry-go-round which was delayed at the freight station on account of the shipment of horses to the show, was up and tirelessly amusing large numbers. "Zarrow" thrilled the watchers early in the evening with a daredevil slide on a high wire, and the late act, Eddie Martyne's performance on the tight wire, was fully as interesting.

The young people of the Plainfield Business College who served at the various attractions Tuesday night were the Misses Mary McDonnell, Florence McDonnell, Marva Voorhees, Helen Southard, R. Harpham, Abbie Rigney, Lillian Smith, Jessie Streng, Catharine Mohan, Gertrude Davis, Kittie Southwick, Anna Willis, Lida Apgar, Gertrude Garrett, A. Smith, Nellie Lake, Anna Diehl, M. Kriney, Julia Cox, Lottie Benner, Clara Allen, Grace Finch, Mary Naylor, Ethel Runyon, Delia Dufford, Anna Boss, Harriet Smith, Mary Auten, Julia Meaney, Abbey Dorgan, Miss Leitheusser, Anna Doyle, Miss Wersing, Elsie McCullough, Irma Hoffman, Miss O'Keefe, Elizabeth Harkins; and George Marsh, Edwin Hoffman, Cecil McConnell, Girard Harris, John Cooper, Harold Painter, Morton Hochberger, Laird Moore, Francis Hickey, William Demler, Luther Mason, Francis Hoagland, Page Edwards, Philip Hehn, James Lynch, William Brown, George Cole, Russell Van Buskirck, Francis Briscoe, Harvey Greenwood, A. LaTourette, Arthur Jennings, A. Jacobson, Norman Wolcott, A. Loizeaux, A. BIG VAUDEVILLE BILL.

Headline Acts Secured for the New Plainfield Theatre Next Week.

In connection with the "continuous" policy that Manager Counihan has inaugurated at the New Plainfield theatre, he will begin on Monday afternoon next a "monster" vaudeville that will continue through the week. He has secured a bill of exceptional merit, all the artists going direct from this city to the Chestnut street theatre, Philadelphia.

Among the acts that will be seen are May Ward and her eight "musical dolls," described as the most novel musical act on the stage; the Three Lussans, equilibrists, from the Berlin Winter Garden; the DeMerrill Sisters, late of the Hippodrome; The Robertson Quartette of singing and dancing comedians; Frank Clark, monologuist, and Ryan and White, who were featured with "The White Hen" company.

George G. Hollins, of Elizabeth, who on March 11, last, fatally shot James Thorn, a negro, also of Elizabeth, mistaking him for a burglar, was arraigned in the Union County Court, this morning, having been indicted for manslaughter. William R. Wilson, who appeared as his counsel, entered a plea of not guilty and the trial was set down for next Wednesday. Hollins was released on $3,000 bail, furnished by Mrs. Sarah O. G. Pickham, of Elizabeth. Thorn died in the Elizabeth General Hospital a few week's ago.

EQUINE ARISTOCRATS ENTER THE SHOW RING TODAY

Plainfield's Fourth Annual Exhibition Began Promptly at 1 o'clock This Afternoon.

SOCIETY ATTENDS

Fashionable Maids and Matrons in Blue Ribbon Gowns Divide Honors With Proud-Stepping Contestants.

With 177 equine aristocrats awaiting the call of the coach horn to summon them to the ring and the beauty and fashion of the city and vicinity in readiness to applaud, Plainfield's fourth annual horse show under the auspices of the Riding and Driving Club began at the grounds at 1 o'clock this afternoon. Though the weather man has not provided the ideal elements that attended the start last year, he held off the rain and with his forecast of improved conditions nothing stands in the way of making the exhibition the most successful in the country outside of Madison Square Garden. The entry list is larger than ever and the pick of the thoroughbreds in the East will step their proudest in order to secure the coveted blue ribbons.

The exhibition will be noteworthy from the society point of view, and a large number of people well-known in the society in New York, the Oranges, Morristown, Bernardsville, Philadelphia, Brooklyn and this city will be among those attending each day. Practically all of the private boxes have been taken as follows:

A—T. W. Bakewell; B—Simeon A. Cruikshank; C—Henry C. Irons and Jabez C. Gilbert; D—William Palmer Smith; E—George A. Beaton; F—Percy H. Stewart; G—John Bushnell; H—E. H. Ladd, Jr., and D. F. Ginna; I—Charles J. Fisk; J—E. S. Hooley; K—Thomas J. Mumford; L—George P. Mellick; M—Lewis E. Waring; N—Mrs. Chapman Fisk; O—C. Wesley Holland; P—Henry G. Runkle.

In the auxiliary stands the boxholders are as follows:

Ring wing—A—O. T. Waring; B—E. T. Bedford; C—Henry L Hall and F. W. Butler; D—A. C. Beckstein; E—Charles W. McCutchen; F—William J. Buttfield; G—Robert A. Fairbairn; H—Edward F. Low. Left wing—I—Tonzo Sauvage; J—Lady exhibitors; K and L—vacant; M—Judges; N and O—vacant; P—Harry Finch.

The exhibition began promptly at one o'clock this afternoon with Class 45, five ponies in harness, local, and the program calls for a total of sixteen classes during the afternoon, the last one being Class 40, seven hunters (Watchung Hunt Club cup) at 5.30 o'clock. Seventeen classes will be shown tomorrow and an equal number on Saturday.

In today's exhibition there will be classes for saddle horses, pairs of harness horses, runabout horses, ponies under saddle, roadsters, combination harness and saddle horses, ladies' hunters, tandems and hunters. On account of the large number of classes the judges announce that each one will be judged promptly on the scheduled time.

There is sure to be great rivalry between ReginaldVanderbilt's horses and those representing the Avondale Farm, owned by J. W. Harriman, each stable sending a string of eighteen entries to the show. Many new exhibitors will be found, while a majority of the old favorites have returned. With favorable weather the exhibition should be one of the best in this part of the country.

The Plainfield Riding and Driving Club has provided liberally in the way of prizes, including cups and purses. There will be unusual interest in the competition for the Thomas W. Lawson challenge cup and the official Blue Book challenge cup, offered by the club. There are several other special prizes offered by individual members of the club.

MUSICAL CLUB MEMBERS GUESTS OF MRS. HOWELL

AFFAIR MARKS THE CLOSE OF THE SEASON'S ACTIVITIES.

The Musical Club, of Plainfield, was entertained at its last meeting of the season at the home of Mrs. J. H. Howell, of Myrtle avenue, yesterday afternoon, when a pleasing program was rendered by the members of the club. There were about thirty guests and the afternoon was given up almost entirely to the musical program.

A piano duette by Mrs. J. Edmund Lee and Miss Cornelia Hyatt was the first number, after which Mrs. Geo. S. Ring sang two numbers. Miss Corey read an interesting paper, prepared by herself on "The Words of Song," followed with two vocal numbers by Miss Bertha vanNuise Willis. The first was a Scotch song and the second "O Come to Me Mavourneen."

Miss Sarah Mae Howell gave two Chopin preludes and Mrs. Joseph M. Shellabarger sang, after which Mrs. Adolph Hagerdorn gave two instrumental numbers on the piano. The program closed with a soprano solo by Mrs. L. R. Hopton and a trio, Mrs. Edward Cox and Mrs. Leighton Calkins, violins, and Miss Corey at the piano.

The entire program was given in a delightful manner and was received with much enthusiasm by the guests. The club has had a very successful season meeting at the homes of the various members. Adjournment was taken yesterday until next fall.

SENATOR FRELINGHUYSEN SERIOUSLY ILL IN CHICAGO.

Is In Hospital After Operation for Appendicitis, from Which He Did Not Rally.

State Senator Joseph D. Frelinghuysen, of Somerville, a member of the firm of Jameson & Frelinghuysen, insurance brokers, of No. 76 William street, Manhattan, is in a critical condition in a hospital in Chicago, Ill., after undergoing an operation for appendicitis Tuesday.

Senator Frelinghuysen left his home at Somerville Monday for a business trip to Chicago. He was in his usual robust health when he started on the trip, but was taken suddenly ill on his arrival at Chicago. His ailment was diagnosed as appendicitis, and an immediate operation was deemed necessary to save his life. He failed to rally as was expected after the operation, and his family at Somerville seem greatly alarmed over the report of his present condition.

Senator Frelinghuysen has been a conspicuous figure in the New Jersey Legislature during the past two years. He is the father of the Frelinghuysen automobile law and a number of other important measures. He was until recently a member of Gov. Stokes' military staff, with the rank of colonel.

Proceedings of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union County.

OFFICIAL.

Adjourned meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders, of the County of Union, N. J., held on Thursday, May 23d, 1907, at 2:30 p. m. Roll call showed the following members present: Director King and Freeholders Adams, Cady, Cladek, Darby, Doane, Donahue, Fay, Gruener, Jones, Krouse, Maurer, Meisel, Perry, Pierson, Robison, Smith and Woodruff, 13. Absent, Freeholders Swain, Wilbur, 2.

The minutes of the previous meeting, the reading of bills being omitted, were on motion approved as read.

COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Freeholder Cladek presented the following petition:

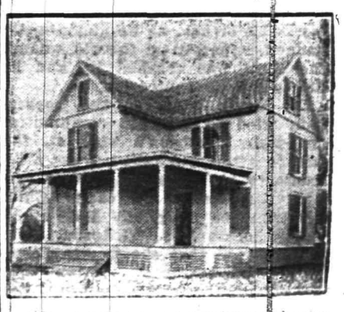
Gentlemen:—The subscribers, residents and property owners in the city of Rahway, respectfully request that St. George avenue, extending from Grand street to city line dividing it from the township of Woodbridge anunty of Middlesex, and of Leesville avenue, extending from St. George avenue to the line of said township, in said county of Middlesex, be taken over and adopted as a county road, and after its adoption, maintained and kept up as a county road, in the same manner as other county roads are maintained. The above consists of about a mile of road in the suburbs of said city of Rahway and is the main artery or road used by all automobiles and other conveyances between Elizabeth and New Brunswick, Trenton Philadelphia and also to Long Branch, Asbury Park and other resorts along the Jersey coast. If this short piece of road was adopted as a county road it would connect with the county road in the county of Middlesex, and should by all means be under your control and supervision for the reason that it would thereby comply with both the object and spirit of the county road act under which most of the county roads in this county are constructed and maintained. We believe on inspection you will perceive the advisability of its adoption to complete the system of beautiful and unsurpassed roads in this county, so that the residents herein, and other places who have occasion to use the same will have a good and substantial outlet to the adjoining county of Middlesex. Dated May 15, 1907. H. Simmons, Joseph T. Mead, H. B. Rollinson, Peter Tillman, and thirty-four others.

Freeholder Cladek moved that the petition be received, filed and referred to the committee of the whole to go over and examine said road, which, after some discussion, was so ordered, and Monday, June 3d, at 3:15 p. m. fixed as the time for in-

NEW SYSTEM OF BUILDING.

A MARVEL IN THE SCIENCE OF CONSTRUCTION.

A method far in advance of anything formerly used in the preparation of the different parts of a house when erected in sections, making it easy to construct any design of a house, and a very superior house for all seasons, countries and climates at a great reduction in cost.



These houses are constructed principally from the best kiln dried lumber in a factory entirely protected from weather, where best high speed woodworking machines are used for cutting and shaping of every piece, reducing cost for mechanics fully one-half, making a superior house when finished.

Houses of other structures erected under this system make the warmest houses in winter, and the strongest building that can be constructed with any material, the fiercest storm fails to cause any vibration whatever. They are adapted to receive all improvements, plumbing, lighting, heating, etc., when desired.

A new method of lath and plaster is used for interior finish, making a perfect indestructable wall superior to anything ever before used.

Estimates furnished.

Gentlemen:—The undersigned, committee to whom was referred the matter of the application of the Consumers' Acqueduct Company, requesting the consent of the board of Freeholders of this county to raise and make certain changes in the bridge and roadwork on Madison Hill road, over Robinson's branch, on the Raritan road; and also the small bridge which crosses the tributary of the Robinson's branch, known as Curtis' run, near the Lehigh Valley Railroad in the township of Clark, county of Union, beg to report that they have inspected the premises in question, and would recommend that their request be granted upon the condition that said company first enter into a contract with this board embracing the following conditions and provisions, and that they furnish a bond of indemnity, as to form and security, satisfactory to this board:

Condition 1. That said Consumers' Acqueduct Company procure all necessary consents to the change in the roadway, both as to location and grade, and to the flooding of the lands proposed to be flooded or used by them.

Condition 2. That said company assume all responsibility for damage or claims by reason of the proposed change of grade or location or roadway, or bridges proposed to be built, whether by individuals or corporations.

Condition 3. That the bridge over Robinson's branch near the residence of Henry Bender will be a three span thirty foot each iron beam, concrete floor bridge of not less than twenty-one feet in width, with proper wing walls and parapets, and of character and material and height as shown by plans and specifications prepared and approved by F. J. Hubbard, county engineer.

Condition 4. That said Consumers' Acqueduct Company, to remove the present iron structure now over Robinson's branch near the residence of Henry Bender, to the location of the present wooden bridge over the tributary to said branch near the Lehigh Valley Railroad, and to erect the same on new abutments as per plans and specifications to be furnished by F. All of said work to be done and completed by Said Consumers' Acqueduct Company, under the supervision of this board, the committee in charge, and the county engineer herein specified, and at the expense of said Consumers' Acqueduct Company, and to be completed on or before August 1st, 1907. Respectfully submitted, Henry Krouse, Charles A. Smith, Thomas J. Pierson, George B. Cladek, committee.

Dated May 23d, 1907.

Freeholdre Smith moved the report be received and recommendation be adopted, which was so ordered without dissent.

By the committee on new bridge over Robinson's Branch of the Rahway river, at Rahway:

Your committee on the proposed bridge over the Robinson's Branch of the Rahway river, at New Church street, Rahway, N. J., would respectfully report that they have examined the site for the proposed bridge. There is no bridge over the stream at this point at the present time, the street being now newly laid out and now being graded. The committee are of the opinion that a bridge over the stream at this point is necessary, in order to serve properly the interests of the neighborhood, and to provide a short way to and from the public schools, and would recommend the construction of a reinforced concrete-steel bridge, of sixty feet span, and about forty-five feet in width, the cost to be not more than $9,500. Adolph H. Gruener, J. Hervey Doane, Henry Krouse, Noah Woodruff, John J. Donahue, Committee.

Freeholder Cladek moved that the report be received and recommendation adopted, which was so ordered on roll call by a unanimous vote.

By the committee on Two Bridges in Union Township:

Your committee on two bridges in Union township and Roselle Park, would respectfully report that they have examined the same and find them in very bad condition, and would recommend that a part of the wall be rebuilt, and a covering of steel beams and brick arches at a cost not to exceed $198, for the one in Union township, and a new bridge to be built at Roselle Park at a cos not to exceed $130. Noah Woodruff, Peter H. Meisel, E. K. Adams, Committee.

Freeholder Gruener moved that the report be received and recommendation adopted, which was so ordered on roll call by a unanimous vote.

Freeholder Smith, chairman of the special committee to whom was referred the matter of the purchase of three paintings from the Veteran Zouaves of Elizabeth, reported progress, which report was received.

New Business.

By Freeholder Adams:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to investigate the advisability of rebuilding the old wooden bridge over the brook at Claremont Place and Prospect street at Cranford, and report at the next meeting of this board.

Sunbonnet Number Two.

"The Study" is the title of the second sunbonnet picture to be given with the New York World next Sunday. This picture is a little gem. It is on a plate paper and is executed in the most artistic manner in many colors. "The Study" is just the size for framing or mounting behind glass. Beautiful room decorations can be made with these clever and artistic pictures. Every one should get the set; there is a new picture each Sunday.

Artistic Originality in Dress

The best-dressed woman is she into whose costume enters a touch of individuality—of originality if you choose.

A woman instinctively knows this but shrinks from the effort to model her own gowns because of the trouble it involves.

The Singer Automatic reduces effort to a minimum.

It is a mechanism that makes a single thread chain-stitch and its Simplicity, Ease of Operation and Excellence of Work commend it to all who wish to express their artistic sense in the nature of a beautiful wardrobe.

Dressmaking is a pleasure if a Singer be used.

Sale of the Famed Banister Men's $6 to $8 Shoes and Oxfords at $3.50.

The James A. Banister Shoes, made right here in Newark, are recognized all over the world as the acme of perfection in shoe making, and they are universally sold at $6 and $8 because thousands have found them to be well worth these prices.

Now it is only natural that shoes noted as the best in the world must be strictly perfect, and the makers could not afford to allow a single pair to go out of the factory under their name as perfect if it were not strictly so.

What the inspectors in the James A. Banister factory would call an imperfection might be so slight that the average inspector would pass it as perfect, and in factories where shoes of lesser note were made would easily pass O. K. So when you come to buy these Shoes and Oxfords, though they are called imperfect by the makers, you will be unable to find fault or blemish in them. We have examined many pairs critically and can see nothing that would lead us to say the shoes were in the slightest degree imperfect. Certain it is that such imperfections as may exist will not in the slightest degree effect the wear or the looks of the shoes; therefore those who get them at $3.50 will be actually saving $2.50 to $4.50 a pair, and for the price of ordinary shoes will secure the best in the world.

There are four styles to choose from—Button, Lace, Blucher Cut High Shoes and Oxford Ties, in patent leather, patent coltskin, kidskin, calfskin and Russia Tan, patent leathers predominating. All sizes and widths; every pair made this season for summer and fall selling. Choose from the enormous lot, beginning tomorrow morning and continuing until they are sold, at the astonishing price of - - - - - - - - - $3.50

DIAMOND DUST.

DeWitt VanCleef, of Trenton, has been appointed an umpire in the New York State League.

It is to be hoped that "Phil." Smith will make good with Newark. He certainly should be able to deliver the goods, considering past performances.

It is reported that Paul Hart, the former Lafayette College pitcher, has signed with the Philadelphia Nationals.

According to rumor Clark Griffith would like to get Heyniger, the star Princeton twirler. The former Plainfield boy is now a junior at Princeton and it is not at all likely he would leave college to play professional ball, inasmuch as he is not obliged to work.

The Carlisle Indian team is playing a very fast game this season, as usual. On Tuesday they defeated the crack Mercersburg aggregation, 5 to 4.

The York Tri-State League Club is reported to have struck the rocks, and plans are completed to play a series of "dollar day" games, the first being scheduled for June 14 and 15 at York.

Moren, the former Jersey City pitcher, now with the Philadelphia Nationals, has not figured in a defeat this season. On Tuesday he won his fourth straight game, pitching against Boston.

Fred Burchell, the Baltimore twirler, well known among local fans, is doing star work for his team this season, having a long string of victories to his credit.

Clinton Avenue is counting on Gilman as a good change pitcher when the weather gets right. In the meantime Randolph is doing fine work.

Clinton Avenue is in need of a strong backstop since O'Loughlin has been forced to retire owing to an injury. Manager Dorflinger hopes to have in Carl Meyer just what the team needs.

With Jack Peacock pitching for Dunellen and a few other changes, that team should be able to make a better fight for the pennant in the amateur league.

GOLF.

About one hundred and twenty entries have been received for the eighth annual championship tournament of the New Jersey State Golf Association, which will begin today over the links of the Baltusrol Golf Club. This formidable list has caused some concern at Baltusrol for fear the supply of caddies will run out. In speaking on the subject last night, George Low, the Baltusrol professional, stated that it is next to impossible to get the usual supply of boys on Thursdays and Fridays, as they are compelled to attend school. As a remedy he suggests that all players who possibly can bring their own caddies from their home club. Prominent among those entered is Jerome D. Travers, of Montclair, twice champion of the Metropolitan Golf Association. It will be his first attempt at the New Jersey championship. Opposed to him will be, among others, Archie Graham, of the North Jersey Country Club, and present title holder; Harold Wilcox, of Montclair, a former Metropolitan champion; Murray Olyphant, of Englewood, an ex-champion of New Jersey; his club mate, Oswald Kirkby, and Marshall Whitlatch, of Montclair.

The Fairfield County Golf Club has set aside Thursday, June 20, for a one-day tournament, open to members of the Women's Metropolitan Golf Association. Conditions call for handicap match play against bogie. This will make the second affair of its kind this season, the first having been held a week ago at the Plainfield Country Club.

The competitive season at the Yountakah Country Club is again under way. On June 22 the North Jersey Country Club team will invade the Nutley course for a match. July 4 will be a busy day for the members, the schedule calling for no less than three contests. There will be bogie handicaps in two classes in the morning and mixed foursomes in the afternoon. The club championship will begin on Labor Day, September 2, with an eighteen hole medal play qualifying round.

Members of the Fairview Country Club are engaged at handicap match play in three classes. In class A, J. A. Harris has reached the final round and will meet the winner of the R. Hammerslough—W. Herz match. L. Wolfe and S. K. Jacobs have reached the final in class B, while S. Hirsch and V. H. Kohn occupy a similar position in class C.

Howard J. Gee won the championship of the Princeton Golf Club on Tuesday by defeating T. Conover 1 up in a nineteen hole match. In the semi-final round Gee defeated Ralph Peters, Jr., by 1 up, while Conover beat F. H. McAdoo by 3 up and 1 to play. Gee was unable to compete in the recent invitation tournament at Princeton because of a sprained wrist.

Plainfield, N. J., June 6, 1907.

A CHANCE TO SPEAK.

Plainfield's Board of Trade has issued a call for a meeting tonight and the citizen who has an opinion regarding the permanent pavement question, either one way or the other, should make it his duty to be in attendance. The greater part of the time will be devoted to the discussion of the problem which now has the Common Council in a state of perplexity and the best way to do it is by getting the views of the people who are directly interested. The Board of Trade has not announced itself in favor of brick or any other form of pavement but it has declared after mature deliberation that North avenue should be included in the plans for improvement, doing so at the behest of merchants and property owners on the thoroughfare. Tonight's meeting has been planned in an effort to learn the sentiment regarding the method of paving and the expressions received will be sifted down for a recommendation to the Councilmanic body. It has been declared on more than one occasion that the taxpayers were not given a sufficient opportunity to air their views and the Board seeks to provide it.

Attend the meeting, and by so doing aid the men who have the interests of the city at heart to fix upon a definite report as coming from the people.

Hats off to King Horse.

DIVIDEND DISBURSEMENTS.

Plainfielders to Share in $2,000,000 to go to Bond-holders.

The trading in stock of New Jersey railroad companies was very brisk last week, and brokers are confident that the trading will be as lively this week as last, since about $2,000,000 in dividends and interest was due and payable Saturday. Of this amount, $1,635,000 was paid on the securities of the Public Service Corporation. Elizabeth, Plainfield, and Central Jersey bonds paid out $50,000.

Nearly all of the payable $2,000,000 goes to bondholders in Newark, Jersey City, Elizabeth, Paterson, Plainfield and other Jersey cities.

The reason that the brokers look for another week is because when investors get large sums in dividend and interest, they buy interest-paying stocks and bonds—especially the latter—and all kinds of Jersey securities are now quoted at reasonably low figures.

Miss Ernestine C. Smith, of Madison avenue, has returned from a pleasant visit with Mrs. H. B. Putnam at Troy, N. Y.

The Helping Hand for June has a good picture of Miss Julia G. Shinn with an appreciative editorial on her coming into her new position as one of the home corresponding secretaries of the Woman's Board of the Baptist Foreign Missionary Society, whose headquarters are at Boston. During Miss Shinn's residence in this city, previous to her seven years' effective work in the Kemendine Girls' School, Burmah, she made so many friends that they will be glad to read the words of praise from the Helping Hand editorial: "We welcome Miss Shinn to this new service for the society, and rejoice for what she brings to it—a winning personality, a gift for delivering a persuasive message, consecration and a rich experience. She will give her best to the society. Let us give her our heartiest co-operation."

Croker Wins Derby.

London, June 6.—Richard Croker's colt, Orby, the three-yar-old-son of Orme and Rhoda B, ridden by the American jockey, Johhy Reiff, won the Derby, worth $32,500, at Epsom Downs yesterday. The odds on Orby were 100 to 9. Croker had no money up. Orby's winning puts the English turf authorities in rather a peculiar posiition. It is interesting to see what they will do now that the man to whom they refused permission to train at Newmarket has come from his Irish farm with the winner of England's greatest racing event. Their position is reconciling their former attitude will, it is thought, be a hard one.

GIRL DISAPPEARS AND TAKES TWO DRESSES.

Grandmother, Who Kept House for Her, Cannot Explain Why She Went Away.

Miss Marco Reynolds, who for a year has been in charge of the Western Union Telegraph office, at Rahway, has been absent from her post since Friday. Her grandmother, Mrs. Flake, who kept house for her, has no idea where the young woman has gone. She requested yesterday the police to aid her in searching for the young woman.

Miss Reynolds worked as usual Friday and seemed in good spirits. She went home to supper and it appears now that when she left home she wore two dresses or else had removed one of her dresses from the house previously. She did not take a hat from the house. She appears to have closed her office at the usual time, but did not return home.

Miss Reynolds went to Rahway from Canada. Her accounts with the telegraph company are all right. She did not have any love affair so far as known, and if she had, was practically her own boss. She is about twenty years old, tall and slender, good looking, and wears glasses.

Mrs. C. S. Scott, of Toronto, Can., who has been visiting her sister, Miss Matilda Hewlitt, a graduate of the Muhlenberg Hospital Training School, has returned home.

Rev. A. C. McCrea, of the First M. E. church, is visiting Dickinson College, this week, as a representative of the Newark Conference. He delivered the address at the graduation banquet Tuesday night.

—P. H. Latourette, auctioneer, will sell the household goods tomorrow morning at 9:30 at 746 Grant avenue.

MARRIED FIFTY YEARS; NOW HE ASKS DIVORCE.

Wife Says Desertion, if Any, Was by Husband, Who Remained from Home Nineteen Years.

After fifty years of married life George A. Hull, of No. 128 New York avenue, Newark, has filed a petition in the Court of Chancery for a divorce from Adelaide J. Hull, who at present resides in Orange. The petition is returnable next July 1.

Hull is seventy-one years old and his wife is sixty-seven. They were married August 27, 1856, and have had ten children. Of these six are living. There are a number of grandchildren, the oldest of whom is seventeen.

The action is brought on the ground of desertion, which Mrs. Hull claims has no substantial foundation. She asserts on the contrary that if there has been any desertion it was by her husband. She instances an occasion when he left home on a "business" trip and did not return home for nineteen years. Differences over property matters are alleged by Mrs. Hull as the cause of the trouble between her and her husband.

In his petition Hull asserts he has resided at various time at Brooklyn, New York and Easton, Pa. Mrs. Hull pleads surprise at these claims and says she is unaware that her home at any time since her marriage were any where except at Newark and Orange.

"My husband was absent from home nineteen years," declared Mrs. Hull, yesterday. "He went to all parts of the globe and was gone so long that his children scarcely knew him. He returned in 1904. When we separated after that it was in accordance with an understanding, but I did not desert him."

THE FORUM.

The Watchung Hunt Races.

Editor, The Daily Press:

Referring to articles in the daily papers touching the races of the Watchung Hunt, will you permit me space to make a statement in behalf of that organization?

It is implied that the races were in some respects conducted in violation of the law of the State of New Jersey; in what respects is not stated. No such violation is known to the officers of the club.

No arrangement of any kind existed between the club and the bookmakers. The club received no money from them, offered them no privileges or protection, and had nothing to do with them. So far as they were present, they were present on the grounds as other individuals were, through the purchase of their own tickets, with the same rights as the general public—neither more nor less. Any notion that they were present under the protection of the club, or for its profit or advantage, I am authorized to state is unqualifiedly false.

As to the rumors of "jockeying" referred to, I may say that if facts tending to sustain charges of that offense are brought to the attention of the stewards of the hunt, those facts will be thoroughly investigated and acted on in a manner that will give entire satisfaction to those presenting them. Furthermore, the National Steeplechase Association, under whose rules and general jurisdiction the races were held, is always ready to receive and hear charges of this character, and to punish the offender with the severity which the disgraceful character of his act demands.

Yours respectfully,
CHALES C. MARSHALL.
President of the Watchung Hunt.

June 9: "Becoming Skilled Workmen." (Christian Education.) "Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."—II Tim. ii, 15.

By REV. WALTER J. YATES, D. D.

Passages for reference—John iii, 21; I Cor. iii, 6-9; II Cor. ix, 8; Heb. xiii, 20, 21; Rev. xiv, 13.

The final test of a true Christian education is the ability to pass the examination of God. This seems to be Paul's idea, and he is continually emphasizing the need of being filled with all the knowledge of God.

Three things are essential to the acquirement of a real education of the Christian kind. There must be, first, acquisition; second, response; third, reproduction.

As to the first, it must be recognized that we come into a world which is fixed and unchanging in its elements and laws. Things have a certain nature and act in a certain orderly fashion. This is so in the realms of matter, mind and spirit. This state of things and the ways in which they act make up the truth in regard to them. If now we could discover the nature of God and the way in which He does and add it to this other we should have the complete range of actuality. That would be the truth, full and complete.

Our first task is to show things as they really are, so far as we know them at all. This is not an easy matter. Many things look alike, and it takes skill to distinguish them accurately. We come into the world with senses and all other powers untrained and inevitably make many mistakes before we acquire accuracy in the use of any faculty even when we try our best. Most of us are stupid and stubborn and indolent and prefer ease to accuracy and so never train ourselves rigidly to close observation. We have eyes, but we do not see correctly; ears, but are not attentive to hear, and so of the thousand things taking place we observe but a very few, and even these we put so little attention upon that we rarely understand them correctly. The false and absurd get fast hold of us because we have not learned to observe closely and find the truth.

The second factor is as important as the first. There must be insight as well as eyesight. "As a man believeth in his heart so is he." Our inner nature often makes us desire that things should be in a certain way and act in a particular manner. This very wish influences every sense until we seek not the knowledge of actual truth, but the confirmation of our wishes. Until this inner prejudice is removed the eyes and ears will never report accurately concerning the outer world. The blue glass of the mind will make all the world outside appear to be blue, when in fact it may be white.

No less important in Christian education than accuracy of observation and a mind receptive of the truth is the third requisite, the ability to reproduce the truth as it is observed and acquired in inner thought and feeling and choice. What one thinks clearly and feels deeply he will strive earnestly to express. The outer fact has possessed him and shaped his inner life. This inner conviction he must manifest in outward act, speech and look. In a very deep sense he has become identified with the truth he has seen by outer and inner sight. He is disturbed until he can give outward expression to his inner self. He believes, therefore he must speak.

In a most real sense he has heard God speak, and he cannot rest until he has spoken God's word after Him.

Christian education means all this. We must see things as they are in reality, must see them with the soul's eye and know them as truth. We must then train all our powers to the accurate representation of them.

Enlarging Life.

I am quite clear that one of our worst failures is at the point where, having resolved like angels, we drop back into the old matter of fact life and do just what we did before, because we have always done it and because everybody does it and because our fathers and mothers did it, all of which may be the very reason why we should not do it. There is no station of life and no place of one's home where, if he wants to enlarge his life in caring for people outside himself, he may not start on a career of enlargement which shall extend indefinitely. And the man who enters upon infinite purposes lives the infinite life. —Phillips Brooks.

Prayer In the Morning.

The morning is the gate of the day and should be well guarded with prayer. It is one of the threads on which the day's actions are strung and should be well knotted with devotion. If we felt more the majesty of life, we should be more careful of its mornings. He who rushes from his bed to his business and waiteth not to worship is as foolish as though he had not put on his clothes or cleansed his face and as unwise as though he dashed into battle without arms or armor. Be it ours to bathe in the softly flowing river of communion with God before the heat of the wilderness and the burden of the way begin to oppress it.—Charles H. Spurgeon.

God Is Near.

God is always close by. We may act and feel as though He were a thousand miles away, but that makes no difference whatever in the fact of His close presence. As St. Paul says, God is "not far from each one of us." When we are in trouble, we have but to turn our face to God and find Him there to help.

Think not thou canst sigh a sigh
And thy Maker is not by.
Think not thou canst weep a tear
And thy Maker is not near.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning June 9.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

Topic.—How to help those who are younger than ourselves.—Matt. xviii, 1-6.

The attitude of the disciples of Christ toward children in their relation to Christ was that He should not be disturbed by them. It must therefore have seemed like the irony of fate when in their discussion of greatness in the kingdom of heaven the Master should have placed a little child in their midst and have said, "Except ye be converted and become as little children ye shall not enter the kingdom of heaven." They had thought children unworthy of His notice. He declares that unless they become like children they could not enter, much less be great, in the kingdom. Christ's rebuke of the disciples when they attempted to keep children from Him and His use of a child as an object lesson on what a Christian should be should deeply impress us that we should seek the proper attitude toward children, and this is certainly one of helpfulness. We should ever strive to be a help rather than a hindrance to those who are younger than ourselves, and especially to the boys and girls with whom our lives come in contact as parents, teachers or Endeavor workers.

The importance of helping the young is supported by a number of serious reasons. (1) It is the time of life when they are most easily influenced for good or evil. Their characters are in the stage of formation, and a word or an act may deeply impress them, even exert an influence upon them for life. Which way shall our acts influence them, upward or downward? (2) Children are naturally religiously inclined. That they inherit sinful dispositions cannot be denied. Let the occasion arise and it is wonderful how naturally they will deceive and utter falsehoods. But at the same time how easily they believe in God, and how real their faith in God and Christ and heaven is! They should therefore be encouraged along these lines and never be allowed to drift away from them, for it is often such a difficult matter to win them back. (3) The children of today will be the men and women of tomorrow, and the cares and burdens of the world will rest upon them. Who are the leaders in business, in state and in church today? Those who but a few years ago were boys and girls, with no thought of life's serious responsibilities, frivolous and sometimes almost driving parents, teachers and friends to despair. But dwell not too long with the perverse boy and the frivolous girl. In a few years, years that will seem like days, the burdens of life may develop that boy into the most stalwart manhood, and a deep sorrow may touch the heart of that girl which will instantly change her life a woman of strength and of blessing.

But how may we use our influence for good toward those who are younger, especially the children? (1) We must understand them and win their confidence. We must find the key to their little hearts, whatever it is, and it is usually love. Children love to be loved, and they can appreciate true affection and respond to it. (2) We must trust them. There is honor among children. They soon know whether you are truthful or suspicious. And a suspicious person never wields a good influence upon children. It is remarkable how soon they learn to return confidence for confidence and suspicion for suspicion. (3) We must set them a good example. It is useless for you to preach to children if you do not practice as well as preach. Those who are older and whose senses have been dulled by the passing of years may be imposed upon sometimes, but not so with children. Their alert minds soon discover inconsistencies. (4) Win them for Christ. This is the greatest thing. Why those while they are young. Let the overanxious and unholy ambitions that [illegible] that they may [illegible] the children and young for Christ, the greatest possible [illegible] Him and to [illegible] them into His kingdom by the grace of God help to [illegible] that they may never know [illegible] to love and serve [illegible] to worship in His [illegible].

But children and young people have responsibilities as well as privileges. They should love and obey their parents, reverence and respect their elders and strive to please those who are giving time and care in training them up in the fear of the Lord. They should also respond to the efforts of others to win them for Christ and should "remember their Creator in the days of their youth."

Christian Endeavor In Panama.

How about Christian Endeavor? That, too, exists in the canal zone as well as Christian Endeavor uncapitalized. In the Wesleyan church of Colon is a society which Pastor Cook assured me was doing a good work, largely among the Jamaicans. Another society is found among the hotel employees of Christobal, the zone settlement just outside of the native city of Colon. This is in connection with the Presbyterian church, of which Rev. Mr. Fletcher is pastor. Another is conducted by Miss Johnson of Panama, and a remarkably cosmopolitan society it is, consisting of two Syrians, three Italians, one Spaniard and a number of Jamaicans and Barbadians, while the superintendent herself is an Englishwoman. I heard of an American society at Culebra, but did not get particulars. Several other societies are projected.—Dr. Francis E. Clark, Describing His Stay in the Canal Zone.

The Mystery of Carneycroft

BY JOSEPH BROWN COOKE COPYRIGHT 1907 BY STORY-PRESS CORPORATION

She paused, and I could see that she was weeping softly, but I had myself well in hand, and even before I could speak, she resumed slowly:

"You saw Jack when he returned, Mr. Ware, and you must know how I feel about it all, but since Annie has told me that he went away only because, when she knew of the nature of her disease and that her condition was hopeless, she broke the engagement between them and insisted upon his leaving her in the hope that his love would finally die out, I cannot but look upon the matter in a different light. That is why I have tried to do everything in my power for Annie, for, while at first I merely valued her as a friend, I now love her as a sister, but I have never been able to bring myself to a point where I could condone Jack's behavior. He has my sympathy, of course, but he has no reason to follow the course he has and few or no excuses can be made for him."

Her feelings overcame her at last and, wiping away her tears, she sank into the chair that I had left and continued, plaintively:

"Annie speaks of him now almost all the time, and the doctor asked me about it, and when I told him he said that if Jack could come to her at once it might do her a world of good. I know it is a dreadful risk to take in many ways, for Annie did not see him when he was here before, and has no idea of the depths to which he has sunk, but perhaps he would realize his position and do better with her. What do you think about it?"

"I hardly know what to say," I replied. "Have you spoken to Miss Weston about sending for him?"

"Oh, yes," she returned, "and I don't know what to do at all. Whenever I speak of Jack it only throws her into a hysterical state, and just as soon as she thinks I am out of hearing she begins to say those dreadful things I told you about. I am afraid it is a matter we will have to decide for ourselves, Mr. Ware."

"How would it do to get your brother's own opinion and see how he feels?" I suggested. "Either you or I, or even both of us, might write him and put the matter clearly before him. If there is any good left in him—you will pardon me, Miss Carney, I hope, for I spoke very thoughtlessly—but he ought to come to his senses and decide for himself."

She looked up into my face, her eyes wet with tears, but with a wan smile that was evidently conjured up for the moment, and said, gently:

"You need not ask my forgiveness, Mr. Ware, for you always think and speak for the best, and my own feelings toward Jack are the same as yours. I have never mentioned his name to you before for I could not bear to think of those awful days he spent here after my father's death, and I am so glad that poor Annie did not see him then as I did. He knew that he was not fit for her to see and I must say that he showed himself to me only enough to enable us to arrange our business affairs. He seemed to understand the degradation of his position, and although I have never written to him in all these years, my heart warms to him now and I want to overlook it, but I cannot, oh I cannot, Mr. Ware."

"Would you like me to write to him myself?" I asked. "I could hardly explain matters in a telegram, and while to you."

"You Know, Annie Is Growing Steadily Worse."

I never know exactly where he is I have reason to believe that he is in the neighborhood of London or Paris. A letter to his bankers would reach him within a week or ten days and he could be here in a little more than a fortnight."

"You know best," she murmured, resting her head on her hand and wiping her eyes slowly. "You know best and must act according to your own judgment. It seems to me that we ought to send for him, if only for Annie's sake, but I leave it all

Her feelings overwhelmed her again, but as soon as she could calm herself, she went on: "Perhaps I have been wrong myself in not trying to help him and make him see the position in which he has placed himself, but when he was here I could not bring myself to do it."

I remembered Miss Weston's impassioned statement that no one connected with the mysterious happenings at Carney-Croft had done any wrong or was in any way responsible for the present inexplicable condition of things, and, while I could not see how John Carney could have any possible connection with the affair I grasped the frail straw offered by this suggestion and, in my anxiety to calm Miss Carney, I made the most of it that I could.

"I know nothing of your brother's life while he was away," I began, "and, while, of course, I do not count him blameless, I can assure you that you have nothing to regret on your part. You know things of this kind begin slowly and insidiously and—"

"Oh, no!" she interrupted, vehemently, "it was a cowardly way to act, at best, and, as I first understood it, it was worse than cowardly. You can imagine my feelings when I thought it was all for a mere lover's quarrel and then—then, when I knew the whole story, I could not bring myself to view it in a much better light, although, of course, my sympathies all went out to him. It was not the act of such a man as I had always thought Jack to be. I had looked up to him and respected him all my life and it almost broke my heart—it almost broke my heart. You wouldn't do such a thing, Mr. Ware, I know, and even if you try to hide your real opinion of him, I understand too well what it is—and he is my brother—my only brother!"

She sobbed convulsively for some minutes, while I stood like a fool by her side, keeping down, as best I could, the words that were uppermost in my heart and then, suddenly, she arose and said, abruptly:

"I have kept you too long, I fear, but this was troubling me so that I simply had to tell it to some one. I think you had better write to my brother at once and it will have to rest with him whether he comes or not. Good night."

I followed her with my eyes as she entered the house and walked slowly up the stairs.

CHAPTER XIX.

A Trail Discovered.

Another sleepless night followed, but long before the morning broke I had formed an opinion of myself and my conduct that was in no way flattering to either. To be sure, I had been sincere in every thought and act, and when, at times, I had felt and believed that Miss Carney loved me, I had soon argued myself into an opposite way of thinking on the ground, as I have said before, that her feelings toward me were influenced and magnified by her present anxiety and distress. Now, however, after considering the matter through the long hours of the night until my brain fairly reeled and I was sick at heart at the thought of my brutal behavior, I was at last able to see things in a right light.

Miss Carney had given me every evidence of her regard that she could give and still preserve her dignity and womanliness. She had doubtless realized the difficulties of my position, and she had taken into account that her brother's absence served as an added reason for my silence, and so she had met me more than half way and yet I had remained silent.

She had even permitted me to kiss her hand, and then, on the first occasion that offered, she had given me an opportunity to say the words that I owed to her if she would preserve her self-respect and not consider that I had trifled with her in a most cruel and unmanly way. And still I had remained silent, in an egotistical belief that my attitude was chivalrous and commendable when, in fact, it was only Quixotic and brutally unkind.

Now, she could only think that I did not love her, for surely she could not conceive that a sane man would have acted the part I did on the veranda unless he regarded her almost with indifference.

I rose and paced the floor until my head throbbed, hating myself and trying to smother my emotions until the morning came and I could go to her and beg her forgiveness.

As the day began to dawn a cold gray light spread itself over the fields, showing the hoar-frost on the grass and bringing clearly into view many distant objects which stood out sharply in the crisp autumn air.

Our first "Elbeco" sewing machine club is rapidly approaching the membership limit and will soon be brought to a close. Are you a member? Have you availed yourself of our helpful offer? If not it certainly behooves you to investigate immediately.

A $45 to $60 Machine for $22.50

$2.00 down and the remaining $20.50 in weekly amounts of $1.00. No "club fees," no interests, no extras. A simple straightforward business proposition whereby you are enabled to secure a really high grade sewing machine for a nominal sum—and sew as you pay.

Regarding Our Guarantee

We warrant our "Elbeco" for ten years just as the maker does the same machine when sold under his name, but at greatly increased cost. We further guarantee to refund your money if at the expiration of thirty days you are dissatisfied with our "Elbeco" machine. There is positively no element of chance in buying an "Elbeco." The reputation of the Bamberger store is behind each and every machine that we sell, to say nothing of the parent factory. Parts of the "Elbeco" may be obtained in any city or town in America by simply visiting the local agent of the maker. A regular $45.00 to $60.00 machine $22.50

MISTAKE WAS THE WIFE'S.

Charge Against Husband Made Without Due Thought.

James McCrea, the new president of the Pennsylvania railroad, said in an interview in Pittsburg, apropos of a false charge against a financial institution: "This charge was more than refuted. The institution came out with flying colors. It reminds me of an incident that happened when I was a rodman in my youth. Working on the Connellsville line, I took a number of meals with a middle-aged farmer and his wife. One day at dinner I noticed that the farmer's wife seemed rather out of sorts, and after dinner I wasn't surprised to hear her say: 'Josiah Simmons, to think that you have forgotten that this is the anniversary of our wedding!' Old Josh flushed guiltily, looking up from his paper with a start. Then he frowned and said in a surprised voice: 'Why, mother, you must be mistaken. We were married on the eighth.' The wife bit her lip. 'Oh, excuse me,' she said. 'I was thinking of my first marriage anniversary.'"

DUE TO GIFT OF SPEECH.

Many and Various Are the "Benefits," Says Writer in Puck.

The gift of speech is the last proof of divine favor, in virtue of which mankind has the rest of the animal kingdom faded, and stands in a class by himself. Some beasts are stronger than men, and some know more, but no beast can be such a bore as a man, nor can any beast slop over, in the true sense of the term. These distinctions we owe to the gift of speech. The gift of speech, moreover, lays us under compulsion to read a great many things which otherwise we would not, in order that when we have nothing to say, we may nevertheless say something. Thus we promote the publishing business, create a demand for wood-pulp, assist in the deforestation of the earth's surface, stir up a new school of kickers, increase discontent and contribute, at length, to progress and petulance. Our ancestors used to consider speech a means of concealing thought, but we have nothing to conceal.—Puck.

The Coward In Us All.

One little sentence written by V. V. V. in the Sphere stabs one rather poignantly. "I am a coward at heart." There are things that a man suspects about himself but does not say, says a writer in the London Chronicle. For example, you may see a man grinning when he is accused of being a cynic, but one has not heard a man saying calmly and seriously, "I am a bit of a snob." Snobbism is not a vice for the public confessional. You may accuse a man of being a "Lothario" and he will be pleased. If you call him a coward—it is a challenge. Yet there is always the snapping point. And V. V. V. shows his courage in confessing the universal failure of civilized man, "I am a coward at heart."

Parable with a Sting.

Bart Kennedy, the English novelist and sociologist, in the course of a bitter attack on the senate, said in Washington: "The senate is true to the American people. Oh, yes; very true to them. Very true indeed. Whenever I think how true the senate is to the people the case of Mary Miles comes into my mind. Mary's husband was a soldier. A soldier out in India, fighting for his king. And one day a friend said to Mary: 'Mary, are your thoughts always true to Charlie, away out there, fighting the hill tribes?' 'Yes, indeed, they are,' Mary answered. 'Whenever a man kisses me I shut my eyes and try to think it's Charlie.'"—Chicago Chronicle.

Much Money Awaits Heirs.

A will dated 1745 and deposited in the Bank of England has just been discovered in that establishment. The testator left his property—worth $25,000—to a family named Windel, living in Fuerstenburg, a village near Baden. During all the years that the will was forgotten the money has been increasing at compound interest and the sum is now $7,250,000. People at Fuerstenburg bearing the name of Windel have heard of the matter and have sent agents to London with papers that, they contend, show their descent from the Windel family named in the will.

"He Who Keepeth His Tongue."

An old fashioned minister was visiting his son in New York recently, and was taken to a fashionable church for the Sunday morning service. The pastor is a young man of great culture, but evidently his oratorical efforts did not greatly impress the visitor, for when they were walking homeward the son remarked approvingly: "That was a good sermon, an excellent sermon. The congregation like Dr. Blank very much." "Yes, a good sermon undoubtedly," his father replied. "It could not possibly have touched a sore spot anywhere."

Infection From a Glass Vase.

The authorities of the Royal museum at Dresden have discovered a glass vase in one of their showcases, dating from the eighteenth century, which shows every sign of suffering from a wasting disease, and not only is it wasting away but the authorities declare it has infected the other glass vessels in its immediate neighborhood. The vase has been carefully examined by experts and various medicines, externally applied, have been prescribed to stay the progress of the malady, but all to no purpose.

New York, June 6.—Dewey, a lion that was born in captivity and has always been regarded as harmless, leaped to the front of his cage in the Central Park menagerie last night and attacked James Coyle, one of the keepers, tearing his right arm and biting off one of his fingers. After Coyle had freed himself from the animal's grasp he fell fainting. He lives at No. 273 West 117th street, and has been employed by the Park Department for several years.

DAME FASHION'S EDICTS REVEALED AT HORSE SHOW

Boxes and Auxiliaries Filled With Society Folk of the City and Surrounding Towns.

MANY STRIKING GOWNS

Sartorial Display as Attractive as the Ring Exhibition— Some of the Notable Costumes.

Efforts on the part of the Plainfield Riding and Driving Club to make the fourth annual horse show the most successful in its history met with ready response from local society folk yesterday. When the first class came before the judges in the ring the boxes and auxiliaries were filled with beautifully gowned matrons and maids from Plainfield, Newark, Morristown, the Oranges and Bernardsville. The cold and somewhat windy weather was not conducive to summer costumes, and as a result most of those in evidence were confined to tailor made suits and wraps.

Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt visited in various boxes during the afternoon. She was attired in a brown and cream stripe, tailor made, set off by a brown hat.

Mrs. E. F. Lowe made a striking appearance in a purple marquisette, with pale blue ruff, and a purple hat trimmed with pink and blue roses.

Another notable costume was worn by Miss Edith Smalley, a heliotrope broadcloth, empire princess; black hat and shaded plumes.

Among the most attractive gowns in the auxiliaries were the following:

Mrs. W. J. Buttfield—Pearl gray tailor made; black hat, yellow trimming.

Mrs. Daniel F. Ginna—Amethyst broadcloth and black hat.

Mrs. Townsend Rushmore—White broadcloth; black hat with black plumes.

Miss Margaret McCutchen—Brown marquisette with brown ruff; Leghorn hat trimmed with roses.

Mrs. Leon Moran—Blue foulard, green hat and green trimmings.

Mrs. Henry C. Irons—Black tailor made gown; black hat, with coque plumes.

Mrs. J. C. Gilbert—Blue Eton; burnt straw hat, with shaded blue trimmings.

Miss Trottie Smith, Mrs. L. E. Waring and Mrs. E. S. Hooley all wore white Sicilians and white hats.

Mrs. George P. Mellick—Gray radium; black hat trimmed with lilacs.

Mrs. Rufus Story Rowland—Blue serge, black hat with pale blue roses.

Miss Frances Martin—Gray pongee, white hat with red roses.

Miss Lucy Otterson—White camel's hair, large white sailor with black wings.

Mrs. John Atkinson Thayer—Blue chiffon cloth over black and white check silk; leghorn hat trimmed with dark blue plume secured with cluster of pastel roses.

Miss May Waring—Grey check suit, black hat, trimmed with flowers and wings of coral pink and wearing coral ear-rings.

Miss Helen Bushnell—Blue Panama suit, ecru hat, trimmed with red roses.

Mrs. George A. Beaton—Biege broadcloth, with ecru hat bound with black, trimmed with brown plumes.

Mrs. Caroline Vail Cutler—Gray chantung; white hat, cherry velvet and green foliage.

Among those noticed in the boxes or promenading were Mr. and Mrs. J. Edgar Corlies, Mr. and Mrs. Percy Stewart, Mrs. Edward M. Van Buren, Mrs. E. R. Ackerman, Mrs. Daniel Runkle, Mrs. Robert Rushmore, Mrs. Walter McGee, E. T. Bedford, William G. Rockefeller, Harry T. Peters, George G. Haven, Jr., J. E. Davis, George Watson, Jr., and K. B. STRAWBERRY FESTIVAL AT TRINITY CHURCH

ANNUAL AFFAIR STARTS OFF WITH MARKED SUCCESS; A 'CABBAGE PATCH'

Under the joint auspices of the Ladies' Christian Work Society and the Young Women's Mission Band, the annual strawberry festival was opened at Trinity Reformed church last night. It will be continued tonight. The lecture room, where the affair was held, was decorated with red, white and blue crepe paper. The attendance was large, and the visitors were liberal in their patronage. No less than twenty-eight quarts of cream was passed out by W. C. Leek, who had charge of the supply of frozen dainty.

There were other things to be enjoyed beside cream, strawberries, strawberry shortcake, and coffee, the attractions including "Mrs. Wiggs' Cabbage Patch," homemade candy, homemade cakes, and lemonade.

The "Cabbage Patch," was a novelty that attracted much attention. Mrs. W. C. Leek, as Mrs. Wiggs, assisted by Miss Edna Dilts as Lovey Mary, and Miss Ella Porter, as one of the Wiggs children, were kept busy selling "cabbages" plucked right from the "earth." The candy was sold by Miss L. A. Force, assisted by Mrs. H. F. Cranford, Mrs. George Mantz, Mrs. Theodore Mantz, Miss Cora Laire, Miss Francis Hand, and Mrs. E. T. Van Winkle. The cake was sold by Mrs. H. Van Name, Mrs. J. Beckman, Mrs. J. Williams, Mrs. G. E. Woodruff, Mrs. C. Ryno and Miss May Van Fleet. At the lemonade booth were the Misses Lillian Dunn, Helen Smith and Margaret Leggett.

General supervision over the affair is exercised by Mrs. Virginiia Chickering, chairman for the Christian Work society, and Miss L. A. Force, for the Mission Band. The waitresses are the Misses Anna and Laura Bodine, Hazel Van Sickle, Margaret Van Deventer, Edna Oliver, Edna Cole, Alice Vroom, Cora Gano, Louise Layton and Jeanette Neal. The decorating committee was made up of Mrs. G. W. Cole, Mrs. H. Van Name, Mrs. W. A. Woodruff, and Mrs. F. Storr. Mrs. L. M. Dunavan and Mrs. E. A. Zeisz were cashiers.

Very acceptable music was played last night by G. H. Kenyon, representing the Hallett & Davis Piano Company, on one of the latest player pianos.

LAWRENCE FAHN, JR., WEDS MISS BERTHA FRAZEE.

Ceremony Performed at Bride's Home in the Presence of Many Friends.

Miss Bertha Frazee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Frazee, of Elmwood place, and Lawrence Fahn, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Fahn, of the borough, were married last night at the home of the bride's parents by Rev. Joseph O. McKelvey, pastor of Warren chapel. The ceremony was witnessed by a company of fifty people, relatives and near friends of the couple.

The bride was gowned in white silk, trimmed with lace, and carried a bouquet of bride roses. She was attended by her cousin, Miss Florence Maccan, who wore a gown of embroidered organdie over white silk and carried pink carnations. The best man was B. Harrison Fahn, brother of the groom.

The house was attractively decorated with ferns, potted plants and an effective arrangement was an arch of bride roses, beneath which the bridal party stood during the ceremony.

The bride received a great many gifts of use and value, including silverware, cut-glass and furniture. After a short trip the couple will reside for the present with the bride's parents. The groom is employed at the Rushmore Dynamo Works.

Wanted Her Two Dollars.

Henry Lewis, colored, tried to leave the home of Mrs. Sarah Scott, Arlington avenue, where he had been boarding, last night, but Mrs. Scott objected. She wanted $2 that was due her for a suit of clothes she sold him. A row resulted and Patrolman McCarthy arrested them. Mrs. Scott told Judge Runyon this morning that she would take Lewis' word for the payment of the $2, and sentence was suspended.

STILL TALKING PAVING

Board of Trade Keeps Sturdily at Its Pet Topic.

WOULD GINGER COUNCIL

One Member Says City Fathers Lack Sand—W. L. Saunders Offers Explanation of Absence of Permanent Pave.

The paving question was again discussed by the Board of Trade, at its June meeting, last night. The members were unanimous in condemning delay on the part of the Council, and a resolution flatly endorsing brick as the material to be used on the streets was passed. Arrangements were made to send as big a delegation of members as possible to the next public hearing on the permanent pavement proposition, and to give vigorous utterance to the sentiment of the Board on the question.

The meeting was as animated as the last half a dozen sessions. A score of the prominent members were present, including former Mayor William L. Saunders, of North Plainfield.

L. B. Woolston brought the pavement question before the Board in form for discussion by moving that it was the sense of the members present that the Common Council should adopt brick as the permanent paving material. The motion was later amended with his consent to include an injunction to hasten the laying of the pavement.

The members agreed that the Council was not conserving the interests of the city by delaying the pavement project. Some form of pavement was wanted as quickly as it could be laid; the time for leisurely consideration of the subject had passed.

F. T. Dunham, who was a member of the committee appointed to represent the Board at the last public hearing, said there was no use discussing the question longer. It had been discussed by the Board for years, and the thing to do now was to insist that the Council lay some permanent pavement of accepted durability without further shilly-shallying. He favored brick, he said, but was not wedded to it. The main objection to brick, that of the noise it gave out when wagons rolled over it, he knew had been met by a system of laying that reduced the noise to hardly anything.

L. B. Woolston said he was disgusted with the action of the Council at the last meeting. He couldn't see that it was done with good judgment, or in an honest effort to advance the city's good. The work ought to be started without delay, he said. Plainfield had outgrown macadam.

The real trouble with the Council, Charles W. Runyon said, was that it lacked sand. The members were afraid to put the ordinance through last Monday night because of the additional cost of the North avenue work.

If that was the case, President Marshall observed, it might be a good thing to get rid of some of the councilmen, if permanent pavement was wanted.

Former Mayor Saunders spoke vigorously in favor of brick. He had often wondered, he said, why the streets were not paved with some enduring material, and the only explanation that suggested itself was that men in the stone-crushing business controlled the situation. As for the pavement that ought to be laid, brick was recognized and accepted all over, especially in municipalities of Plainfield's size, as an undoubted success. It had been subjected to the test of years and found good. Moreover, it was the only logical choice to make. It was the essence of good engineering to accomplish the desired purpose at the least expense. Brick met that requirement. Other pavements might be just as good, but brick was the cheapest of the proved successful and durable pavements. The objection to the noise Mr. Saunders regarded as unworthy of serious consideration. If Broadway or some such thoroughfare were to be paved with it, the objection might have some weight, but in a town of this size, where there was practically no rapid traffic, where the streets were narrow, compelling what traffic there was to congest and move slowly, the objection fell to the ground; especially in view of the improved methods of laying.

Mr. Saunders said he had been surprised to learn that the Board was not represented at the public hearing by speakers to set forth the views expressed last night, in terms vigorous enough to impress the councilmen. The Board should be so represented, he said. At his suggestion, Secretary Feickert was instructed to write cards to all the members urging them to attend the next hearing on pavements in the Council cham-

COLUMBUS KNIGHTS MAKE CARNIVAL HUM

VISITING DELEGATIONS THERE FROM A NUMBER OF PLACES.

Still favored by the weather powers, which have considerately held off actual downpours and frosts, although not in the best of humors, the Knights of Columbus carnival drew another big crowd last night. It was the largest attendance of the three nights. The attendance was estimated at between 7,000 and 8,000.

The grounds were in charge of Columbus Knights. Delegations from Rahway, Elizabeth, Newark, Bayonne, Jersey City, Woodbridge and other places were present, and those who did not help in manning the attractions and urging on the spenders, did valiant service spending themselves. The receipts were much larger than on either of the preceding nights. The auxiliary tent, receiving chivalric attention from all the visiting Knights, did so much business that the returns almost knocked out the collective eye of the committee.

A feature of the evening was the appearance of Gaanda Humanus, the mechanical man, in a Mitchell automobile. Mr. Humanus, chaperoned by his engineer, and flanked by Paul Gillette, who can make a Mitchell car purr or snort mad defiance at speed records, guided the car from the North avenue station to the carnival grounds.

Tonight will be politicians' night at the grounds. All the politicians—big, medium, little, amateur, professional, and would-be—are expected to come out and boom the carnival attractions.

STRAWBERRIES AND CREAM FIND READY PATRONAGE

ANNUAL FESTIVAL AT GRACE THE M. E. CHURCH LARGELY ATTENDED.

The strawberry and ice cream festival and sale held at Grace M. E. church, last night, was largely attended and a great success. The affair was arranged by the women of the church, assisted by the Epworth League. The decorations were especially attractive. An entertainment entitled "Daisies," was given in songs and acting by the small children of the Sunday-school, who were in charge of Mrs. Charles Herman and Mrs. Charles Harden.

The candy table, decorated in red and white, was in charge of the Epwarth League, and Mrs. W. H. Conroy and Mrs. Bird had charge of the flower booth. Mrs. Charles Force and Mrs. Andrew Lutkins presided at the fancy table and Mrs. William Nelson and Miss Emma Smalley at the lemonade well. Mrs. J. W. A. Bauersachs looked after the strawberries, Mrs. E. A. Vermeule the cake table, Mrs. Charles Lippincott the ice cream and Mrs. S. H. Beeching took charge of the art gallery, which was a center of attraction. The affair will be continued tonight.

Graduating Exercises.

The public schools of Warren township celebrated the close of the year with exercises in the Mt. Bethel church Tuesday night. All the schools of the township were represented on the program, which consisted of songs, recitations, drills and dialogues. There was an address by Horace Codington, president of the Warren township Board of Education. Diplomas for graduation from the grammar schools were presented to the following students: Springdale school, Flora Mundy, Matilda Sides, Emma Schneider, Mamie Allette; Dead River school, Bertha Wood, Emma Dougherty; Warrenville school, Myrtle Kipsey. Supervising Principal F. H. Sage was in charge of the program.

Sunday-school Benefit.

A three-act comedy drama entitled "Bachelors," with vocal and instrumental music interspersed, will be given in the Willow Grove chapel, Tuesday night, June 11, at 8:15 o'clock, for the benefit of the Sunday-school. Stages will leave Westfield station, south side, and Scotch Plains trolley at 7:30 o'clock to convey passengers.

Juniors Defeat Seniors.

The juniors of the city high school defeated the seniors in a baseball game yesterday, on Crescent Oval, by the score of 10 to 4. It was a mild game and errors were plenty. Douglas and Van Deventer formed the battery for the seniors, and Foster and Caldwell for the juniors.

Children's Service in the Morning.

The morning service at Trinity Reformed church on Sunday next will be in charge of the Sunday-school and not the evening service as announced yesterday.

HOLY CROSS CLUB HOLDS TRACK MEET TOMORROW.

Young Athletes Will Compete in Nine Events for Handsome Medals.

The boys of Holy Cross Club are anxiously watching the weather, hoping for sun and warmth tomorrow morning, both being needed for the athletic meet to be held at 9:45 on the cricket field.

It is said by good judges that a finer set of young athletes than those of Holy Cross Club would be hard to find. The boys will appear in running pants and jerseys, and shod in tennis shoes. The members of the football team who successfully won their monogram will exhibit the same proudly on the front of their running jerseys.

The events for the competition are as follows: 100 yard dash, standing high jump, 15 yard dash, running high jump, shot put, standing broad jump, pole vault, running broad jump, potato race; nine events in all. The boys will be divided into two classes—Class A and Class B. The prizes are three medals, gold, silver and bronze for class A and the same for class B.—six medals in all which are of special design and beautifully executed. The center of the medals have a wheel and mercury foot, laurel branches surmount the top and inscribed in scroll the words "Holy Cross Club." At the base are the words "Athletic Meet." The medals will be on exhibition tomorrow. Those who make the best showing at tomorrow's meet will constitute the club track team which in future will compete with various school teams and those of athletic organizations.

The competition tomorrow is open to club members only.

A HORSE SHOW DINNER.

Judges and Club Officials Guests of Charles W. McCutchen.

Charles W. McCutchen, president of the Plainfield Riding and Driving Club, gave a dinner at his home, last night, in honor of the judges of the show and the horse show committee. It was a brilliant affair and the guests fully enjoyed the hospitality of the club's popular executive.

Those present were: William G. Rockefeller, George Willing, Hamilton H. Salmon, S. Taber Willetts, Joseph G. Marshall, one of last year's judges; Mayor Charles J. Fisk, Robert A. Fairbairn, Orville T. Waring, William J. Buttfield, George P. Mellick, Lewis G. Timpson, Edwin S. Hooley, Lewis E. Waring and Charles W. McCutchen.

Popular Prices Tomorrow.

That the people of Plainfield may have the opportunity to enjoy the fine horse show being held this week, the officials of the club have decided to charge popular prices tomorrow. The general admission to the grounds will be fifty cents, and it is hoped that a large number of people will show their appreciation of the efforts of the club by attending the show.

HORSE SHOW NOTES.

During the afternoon while the various classes were being shown, Benjamin La Vere's Band rendered the following program: March, "Free Lance," Sousa; "The Red Mill," Herbert; Schottische, "Kiss-Kiss-Kiss," Hoffman; medley, "When the Flowers Bloom in Springtime," VonTilzer; "Shillalah O," Sweet, and "The Whistler and His Dog," Pryor. The entrants in the different classes were summoned to the ring by William Stiles, who entertained the crowd with the familiar calls and snatches of popular selections on the coach horn.

One of the popular places at the show yesterday was the restaurant beneath the grandstand, where David Shay, the stewart at the Plainfield Country Club, serves luncheon to the patrons of the show. Mr. Shay was kept busy attending to the wants of the many patrons.

George P. Mellick will give a luncheon at his bungalow tomorrow in honor of the judges at the show.

J. W. Harriman, who is one of the largest exhibitors at the show, gave a luncheon today at the Plainfield Country Club for a number of his friends.

Mrs. Belle Beach-Rain, who was such a familiar figure at last year's show, when she captured a number of blues, watches all the classes with a critical eye.

Reginald Vanderbilt, who is the biggest noise among the exhibitors, didn't come to the show grounds with a coach-and-six or behind a spanking team of grays or some such horsey trimming. There wasn't even a mettlesome black about his immediate person. He came in a $15,000 automobile, and talked carburettor and clutch almost as much as action and manners.

Joseph Wiedoson's Funeral.

The funeral of Joseph Wiedoson, who committed suicide at the State Hospital, Morris Plains, on Tuesday, was held this afternoon at 2 o'clock from the undertaking rooms of George Cole on West Second street, and was private. Rev. John Duerschner, of St. Peter's German Lutheran church, officiated. Interment was in Hillside cemetery.

Cut Artery in the Finger.

Allen B. Laing, the electrician, was severly cut by broken glass yesterday afternoon while at work at Truell Hall. He was raising one of the large windows and no sash weights being provided it fell on him, the broken glass cutting an artery in the finger of the right hand. It required several stitches to close the wound.

Tool House Robbed.

The J. D. Loizeaux Company notified the police this morning that its tool house on Rock avenue had been entered by a thief last night, and robbed a number of tools. Detective-Sergeant Flynn was assigned to the case.

Miss Emily Bedford's String Proves Dangerous Rivals in All Competitions.

JUDGING VERY CLOSE

Miss Van Kline, Thrown in Hunter's Class, Pluckily Remounts—Summary of the Ribbon Winners.

Lowering clouds that made matters look somewhat dubious at the start, gradually lifted as the judging proceeded in the first program of Plainfield's fourth annual horse show, yesterday afternoon, and before half the classes were concluded Old Sol was doing his best to make things pleasant. The attendance was nearly double the number noted at the opening last year and prospects for still greater patronage are very good.

To the surprise of nearly everyone yesterday the entries from the Harriman stables had practically a clear field. John Donnelly, the manager, who has charge of the entries from Avondale Farm, was very proud of his achievements over his close rival, when the judges awarded him four blues and one yellow. Mr. Vanderbile received two reds and one yellow for the afternoon. The latter did not arrive at the grounds until late in the day and no doubt he will be a far more important factor in the classes in which his horses are entered for today's program.

Miss Emily H. Bedford was a close competitor in several classes and succeeded in capturing three blues and one red. There was a stir among the spectators when in Class 1, her pair, "Donner" and "Blitzen," formerly owned by Mrs. John Gerken, were sent to the gate. It was said that one of the team showed lameness but a decision was not reached until two of the judges rode with Miss Bedford behind the pair around the ring. She did not take the decision very hard and came back later for additional honors

The rest of the honors were well distributed among the exhibitors. Miss Margaret McCutchen received one yellow and one white, while her father, C. W. McCutchen, captured one blue, one red and one white. It was a bit of a disappointment to many that his famous Arabian horse, "Bimbashi" did not receive the blue in the harness horse class No. 41, but Tonzo Sauvage's "Bluebell" walked off with the honors.

Mrs. Edwin S. Hooley won one red and two yellows, while Miss Mabel Hooley received a yellow. There was considerable interest in Class 45, ponies in harness, local. "Little Miss" Ruth Timpson, driving for Miss Louisa Waring, won the blue in clever fashion with "Imp. Esgog Swell," and received the applaudits of the crowd.

In Class 37 and 40, both hunters and jumpers, Lewis E. Waring's "Grand Slam" won the blues handily. Miss Van Kline, from the Durling Riding Academy, did not have much success in riding for several exhibitors in the hunting and jumping classes. She was unfortunate in having horses that balked at the jumps, but by persistent effort she managed to get them over.

Some excitement was caused in the grandstand during the judging of ladies' hunters when Miss Van Kline's mount, the chestnut gelding, "Sweet Briar," reared just as she go in the saddle and threw her to the ground. She immediately remounted, amid applause, but the animal was unruly and refused to take the jumps well.

Driving for Reginald Vanderbilt, Mrs. Belle Beach-Bain, who was a familiar figure at last year's show, won the red ribbon in Class 11, for harness horses, with "Phoebe Watton" and "Marie Tempest." She was quickly recognized and won favor with the onlookers. Mrs. Donnelly drove the well-known Harriman pair, "Chieftain" and "Laughing Water," winners at many shows.

In all sixteen classes were judged yesterday, and they were so varied

One of our clients owed $48 between four people. His salary is $14 weekly; rent $12 monthly. To have paid $2 weekly to each creditor, combined with rent, would have left only $3 per week to meet expenses, buy clothing, etc.—an impossibility you will agree. He borrowed $50, paid all his creditors, made his future credit good, if ever needed; pays his rent, the loan payments, and has $9 each week to use as his judgment dictates.

POLICE THINK MAN WAS KILLED IN FIGHT.

To Investigate Death of Elizabeth Hostler Whose Skull Was Fractured.

Elizabeth, June 7.—Edward Costello, a hostler, thirty years old and single, died Wednesday night in the Elizabeth General Hospital here, from injuries which it is said he received a few days ago by being kicked on the head by a horse in a stable where he was working. When taken to the hospital it was found his skull was badly fractured. His body is now at Stiner's morgue, Elizabethport, where an investigation of the affair will be made by County Physician Westcott. The hospital authorities know nothing about the case except what was told them when Costello was brought there.

Rumors are in circulation that the man came by his death from hurts received in a fight, and from the vague tale which was given the hospital authorities the police think there may be some foundation in the reports.

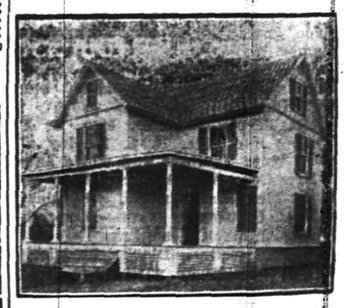
NEW SYSTEM OF BUILDING.

A MARVEL IN THE SCIENCE OF CONSTRUCTION.

A method far in advance of anything formerly used in the preparation of the different parts of a house when erected in sections, making it easy to construct any design of house, and a very superior house for all seasons, countries and climates at a great reduction in cost.



These houses are constructed principally from the best kiln dried lumber in a factory entirely protected from weather, where best high speed woodworking machines are used for cutting and shaping of every piece, reducing cost for mechanics to one-half, making a superior house when finished.

Houses or other structures erected under this system make the warmest houses in winter, and the strongest building that can be constructed with any material, the fiercest storm fails to cause any vibration whatever. They are adapted to receive all improvements, plumbing, lighting, heating, etc., when desired.

A new method of lath and plaster is used for interior finish, making a perfect indestructable wall superior to anything ever before used.

Estimates furnished.

SHORT TALKS BY L. T. COOPER.

THAT TIRED FEELING.

"That tired feeling" is a sure sign that the sys em needs regulating. A dull, droopy man or woman needs something to get the blood jumping once more. The whole body is clogged with impurities, but the seat of the trouble is the stomach. It has been gradually letting down, only half doing its work, and the result is that the kidneys, liver and bowels absorb the unassimilated food and then the blood becomes muddy and sluggish. From one to three bottles of Cooper's New Discovery will get the stomach back in shape. The tired feeling will surely disappear if this is done.

MRS. M. WISE.

This letter tells what a woman thinks who tried it:

"I suffered from loss of appetite, poor digestion and general breaking down. I was so weak I could scarcely get about. I felt tired and worn out nearly all the time. Upon hearing of the great things Cooper's New Discovery was doing for others afflicted as I was, I began to use it. By the time the first bottle was gone my condition was immensely improved. I now feel strong again and do my own work with ease. Please accept my sincere thanks." Mrs. M. Wise, 1217 Norwood St., Indianapolis, Ind.

The Cooper preparations enjoy a larger sale than any other medicine.—That seems to prove their efficiency.

FABLE OF THE PANSY.

Entire Family May Be Traced In Flower's Gay Petals.

Lovers of this pretty flower may be interested in the fable concerning it. The blossom has five petals and five sepals. In most pansies, especially of the earlier and less highly developed varieties, two of the petals are plain in color and three are gay. The two plain petals have a single sepal each, and the third, which is the largest of all, has two sepals. The fable is that the pansy represents a family, consisting of husband, wife and four daughters, two of the latter being step-children of the wife. The plain petals are the step-children, with only one chair; the two small gay petals are the daughters, with a chair each, and the large gay petal is the wife, with two chairs. To find the father one must strip away the petals until the stamens and pistils are bare. They have a fanciful resemblance to an old man with a flannel wrap round his neck, his shoulders upraised and his feet in a bathtub. In France the pansy is universally called the step-mother.

WORKED HIS OWN REDEMPTION.

Future Held Greatness for Young Man of Character.

A New York judge gave his son a thousand dollars, telling him to go to college and graduate. The son returned at the end of freshman year without a dollar and with several ugly habits. At the close of the vacation the judge told his son that he had done all he could for him. If he had wasted the money that was to have taken him through colege, he might as well leave home and make his own way in the world. It was a rude awakening for the young man, but he knew that his father was right. And so strong was the good influence of his upright father that he did leave home to go to work in downright earnest. He went back to college, made his way through, graduated at the head of his class, studied law, became governor of the state of New York, entered the cabinet of the president of the United States and made a record for himself. It was William H. Seward.

Where He Saw a Crowd.

Uncle Constantine, from Fishkill Landing, was in town recently, for the first time in 30 years, according to the New York Times. His relatives were industrious in showing him the sights, but it was extremely difficult to get him to express surprise at anything. He even made disparaging comments, now and then, upon what he saw, and drew comparisons favorable to his own town. One afternoon they attended a crowded performance at the circus. "Uncle Constantine," asked his niece, "did you ever see such a number of people gathered together before?" "Well," said the old man slowly, as his eye ran critically over the thousands that filled the garden, "I don't know as I ever did in a buildin', but I have to a bush-meetin'!"

Easily Explaind.

Her name was Marjorie and she was the sweetest child in the world, with all a child's wonderful thirst for the most out-of-the-way information. She had asked her mother to explain to her what wireless telegraphy was. Marjorie had often heard her father talking of wireless telegraphy, and she wanted to know all about it. So her mother tried to make it clear and explained how there were two long sticks standing high up in the air a very long way from each other, and how a message was sent from the one stick and— "Oh, I know," broke in Marjorie, "then God hears and tells the other people."

In the Wrong Room.

The lady missionary to India sat up in bed, with a spiteful jerk. "You are a man-eater?" she said, looking the tiger severely in the face. "I am," replied the beast, licking his chops with as horrid unction as he could summon. "Well, I declare to goodness!" cried the lady missionary. "Whatever led you to suppose there was a man here? Scat!" "But, madam—" "Not a word, sir!" Of course, the tiger had meant no disrespect, but inasmuch as the lady missionary would listen to nothing, and covered up her head withal, it was only left to him to slink away.—Puck.

Muskrat Grounds Rented.

In parts of the south the muskrat skin trade is so important that the marshes on which they have their burrows are rented out for the shooting. The sport is usually best at night, when the animals are out in search of food. It sometimes occurs that an unusually high tide drives them from their homes, when they are slaughtered in thousands. The fur hunters only kill them in the winter and early spring, when their coats are thick and in prime condition. The flesh is not so good in winter as in warmer weather, as they get thin during the cold weather.

The American Parent.

Jones, who is a natural handy man, does all manner of things for his children that they ought to do for themselves. He confesses it as a fault, and says it is really laziness in him, because it is easier for him to do household chores than it is to follow up the children and train them to do them. "They will miss me a good deal when I go," says Jones. "I can see them now, sitting around with tearful eyes, and saying: 'After all, we never had a man that did the chores like father.'"—Life.

Among others present were the Rev. and Mrs. B. O. Parvin, the Rev. Dr. Thomas H. Mayham, pastor of Trinity M. E. church; Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Hyer, Frederick J. STILL TALKING PAVING ber.

After B. Frank Coriell had expressed his belief that the Council had "bitten off more than it could chew" in the pavement question, with which opinion Mr. Woolston promptly and pithily disagreed, the Woolston resolution was unanimously passed. In his cards to the members, Secretary Feickert will lay the resolution before them, and ask all those in agreement with the idea to appear before the Council and support it.

James L. Brownlee, of Putnam avenue, who is connected with a wood block pavement company, spoke on that style of pavement. He said it was the best, but did not urge it unreservedly on the city. He thought it might be as well for a city in Plainfield's position to try some other, principally because of the cost. Wood block was more expensive than other pavements.

A. S. Herr, head of the Plainfield Business College, who was elected to the Board at the last meeting, asked for the body's moral support for his institution. He said it was being conducted as a public institution, and was working to advance Plainfield and the business world. He invited the Board to use a large room in the school for public meetings. President Marshall said that he believed the Board would be making no mistake in lending its moral support to the school by appearing at the public opening to be held by the school this month in the new rooms in the Woodhull & Martin building.

Following the reading of a communication from Mayor Fisk, in which he approved of the Board's suggestion that it place cans about the business district for the depositing therein of waste paper and refuse that pedestrians now throw into the streets, it was voted to buy twelve such cans. They will be located by Street Commissioner Gavett and Secretary Feickert. The city will dispose of the rubbish deposited in them. More cans will be bought if the experiment warrants the expenditure. The cans cost $3.30 apiece.

A. E. Force suggested that it was time action was taken to prevent the burning of rubbish by householders and business men in back yards and alleys. President Marshall said that Health Officer Thurlow was preparing an ordinance designed to remedy that evil, also to prevent the burning of leaves in the street.

Contributions of $50 from the Niles-Bement-Pond Company, $15 from the Potter Press Works, and $25 from the water company were announced. The P. S. C. wrote it couldn't contribute to the publicity fund, because if it did in this instance it would have to do the same whenever any of the other 150 municipalities in which it did business made the request. The Perrin Glove Company, Washington avenue, wrote that it didn't feel like contributing because the Board hadn't supported it as the company thought it should be supported when the question of erecting a retaining wall along the brook arose between the company and the city. Another firm that had been forgotten when the pamphlet committee made up its list of Plainfield industries, informed the Board that as it was too small to be remembered then it was too insignificant to be noticed at all.

A communication from the Western Foundry Supply Company, of East St. Louis, Mo., asking for information as to available factory accomodations, was received. Negotiations are now pending to locate the company here.

The following new members were elected: C. L. Riley, G. H. Isaacs, Worth & Marsh, John E. Dunn, Dr. A. H. Dundon, J. H. Doane, W. V. Mundy, C. E. Rice, Philip Jahn.

TO TAKE BACK OLD ROAD.

Revolutionary Highway to Be Repaired By Union County.

The Union County Board of Freeholders decided, at the regular meeting yesterday, to take back from the city of Rahway the old Revolutionary highway, known as St. George's avenue, and make a county road of it. This is at the request of Rahway, which finds the road expensive to keep in repair. The road was once a county road; but it was turned over to Rahway some years ago by the Freeholders on request.

This road was formerly known as the King's highway, and was the direct road from Elizabeth to Philadelphia. Mile stones 150 years old still stand marking its course, the distances to Philadelphia still legible on them. At the prettiest part of the road in Rahway lies the old Revolutionary cemetery, where, in 1846, the citizens erected the statue of Abram Clark, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, still standing.

Will Observe Thirtieth Anniversary.

The W. C. T. U. will observe its thirtieth anniversary on Tuesday night, June 18, in the Seventh-Day Baptist church, when Mrs. L. J. Ellis, of Washington, will give a talk on "Congressional Glimpses."

Wrong Property Named.

It was not Dr. J. H. Carman's property on Crescent avenue, as stated yesterday, that was sold to Charles H. Frost, but the property of the late Dr. Myron A. Carman, on Franklin place.

WILL GIVE A DOLL.

Small Misses to Have Great Chance When Miss Ward Arrives.

The coming of Miss May Ward, who is to be a prominent figure in the big vaudeville show at the Plainfield theatre next week, will be of absorbing interest to small girls. Miss Ward will give a large doll, a lovely lady doll with fluffy hair and brilliant complexion, to the sharp-eyed and energetic young person that first meets her when she comes to town and leads her to Manager William J. Counihan. Miss Ward is not so timid that she needs to be led before Mr. Counihan, but that is the condition she attaches to the presentation.

Miss Ward's act is a feature of the bill. She is assisted by eight "Dresden dolls," and they appear in three scenes, with five musical numbers. The act requires a carload of scenery.

There will be eight other "headline" acts, and moving pictures. None of the New York vaudeville shows has anything on the Plainfield bill.

Three Suicidal Attempts.

New York, June 7—Becoming suddenly demented just as she was about to depart for Italy yesterday, Mrs. Angela Marianni first tried to jump from the French line pier and when restrained she threw her two-year-old child under the hoofs of the horses of a United States mail wagon. While the child was being rescued she attempted suicide by stabbing herself several times with a hatpin. When that was taken from her she broke away from her husband and jumped in front of a cab horse and the driver, pulling the animal up with a jerk, narrowly missed running the woman down. By this time hundreds of persons awaiting the departure of the Savoie were in a panic and several policemen rushed in to capture the woman and quell the excitement. She was held until Dr. Camp, of the St. Vincent's Hospital, could give her a quieting draught.

Fruits of unusually good quality may be had always at Lusardi's store, West Front street.

Fight Led to Suicide.

New York, June 7.—After having been missing for three weeks, sixteen year-old Gertrude Mooney, whose parents have been searching the city for her since her disappearance from her home, No. 41 West Twenty-fourth street, was found dead in the Harlem River, off 162d street, yesterday morning. Evidently the girl had thrown herself into the river through fear, said to have been inspired on the day of her disappearance by a visit to the Hospital for Deformities, No. 1,917 Madison avenue, where she had been told she could not recover from a slight spinal curvature from which she suffered.

Dr. F. C. Ard, of Park avenue, registered at the Chalfonte, Atlantic City, yesterday.

GIRL'S ASSAILANT RUN DOWN BY DRILL ENGINE.

Railroad Men, Who Found Suffering Child, Were Her Quick Avengers.

Joseph Kennedy, forty-five years old, a one-armed man, who says he has no permanent home, was committed yesterday to jail, in default of $2,500 bail, by Judge Howell, in the First Criminal Court of Newark, on a charge of assault on Margaret Walsh, eight years old.

Mrs. Mary Walsh, of No. 394 Ferry street, mother of the girl, was the complainant and a train crew of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, who arrested Kennedy and turned him over to the police, appeared as witnesses against the girl's alleged assailant.

It is alleged that Kennedy enticed the Walsh girl and a companion of the same age away from home by promising to buy them candy. One of the girls became frightened and ran home, but it is alleged Kennedy seized the Walsh girl and dragged her along the Central Railroad tracks.

Some time later Frank Rebur, John H. Smith and John June found the girl unconscious near the tracks. They revived her, and when they saw finger marks on her throat and learned of the attack on her they gave chase to Kennedy.

He was a quarter of a mile away when the pursuit began, but the railroad men quickly overtook him by using a drill engine to overcome the distance.

Kennedy declined to make a statement in his own behalf.

LEADING MEN BEFORE UNION GRAND JURY.

Prominent Residents Subpoenaed in Connection with the Probing of Alleged "Bishops' Law" Violations.

The Union County Grand Jury yesterday began investigation of the alleged violations of the "bishops' law" by saloon-keepers in the upper part of Elizabeth. The probing heretofore had been done at Elizabethport and in the German and Italian quarters of the city. Many leading business and professional men, to their dismay, were confronted by constables yesterday afternoon and evening at their offices or homes, and served with subpoenaes to appear today before the grand jury.

Quite a commotion was caused by this move on the part of Prosecutor Nicholas O. J. English, as it was supposed that this, the most reputable section of Elizabeth, was immune from any grand jury inquisition. The liquor dealers now are more alarmed than ever, as they do not know where this matter will end. The witness room adjoining the grand jury room was crowded this morning with citizens, who, judging from their annoyed and worried looks, would rather at the time be anywhere else than in Union county. It is said fifty subpoenaes were served Wednesday on witnesses.

FIRE SCARE AT PATERSON.

All Apparatus of the City Called to Subdue Blaze.

For a time yesterday afternoon fire threatened the business district of Paterson, and a general alarm summoned all the fire apparatus. The blaze originated in the rooms of the Patterson Athletic Club on the second floor of the Smith building and spread to the lodge rooms on the third floor.

When the firemen arrived the flames were shooting through all the windows on the Main street side, but the efforts of the firemen confined the damage to the club and lodge rooms, although considerable injury was done by water to Smith's drug store on the first floor.

Waiters With Gems.

New York, June 7.—Two Greek waiters, one of whom had in his possession a gold card case incrusted with diamonds and valued at $10,000, were arrested last night on suspicion of being implicated in extensive thefts from the patrons of hotels and restaurants. Cortas Merras, thirty years old, who for the last seven years has been employed in Sherry's, and Emanuel Parbikes, forty-two, who for five years has been in the Hotel Manhattan, are the prisoners. The men shared a room at No. 233 East Thirty-ninth street, where articles of value were found beneath the bed. Bank books, certificates of stock and other documents they had showed that they were on the road to wealth. The police believe the capture of these men will disclose that there has been for several years a band of dishonest waiters at work, concerning whom little is known except in the private detective agencies employed by the hotels.

Breeds Chicken That Talks.

San Jose, Cal., June 7.—After ten years of experimenting Clinton H. Willis, a rancher on the Monterey road, has raised a chicken that can talk. The fowl is the sixth generation of a cross between a parrot and a guinea hen, but in every characteristic except the lower half of its bill and the arrangement of its toes the bird is a chicken. At present the chicken's vocabulary is limited to "Good morning, Clint;" "Chawterbacker, Clint," and a three syllable "cuss" word. Willis has refused $200 for the chicken, as he will try to improve the breed.

SIMILAR, BUT DIFFERENT.

"I've got a bright idea, George!"
Exclaimed the maiden fair
To the young man by her side
As the sunbeams kissed her hair.

"No doubt," said he; "and I'm sure
If you would consent to go
With me and face the minister
I'd have a bright-eyed dear also."
—Judge.

Perseverance.

The mistress of a large, fashionable home had just secured a new maid of Irish extraction, and who had just come from the "ould sod." Being on friendly terms with her neighbor, she told the maid that the neighbor could use anything she desired.

One day the mistress went out for all morning. On her return she found that the telephone which had been installed in the hall was gone. Calling the maid, she inquired for it.

"Plaise, mum," answered Bridget, "th' lady across th' shtrate asked me if she cud use th' tilephone, an' Oi sint it over to her; but Oi hod an awful toime to git it unshcrewed."—Judge.

Changed.

But Love, it soon appeared, was by no means the spoiled child he once had been.

"People don't make so much of him as formerly, particularly Americans," whispered Venus, with a note of resentment.

That was the mother of it. She was downright offended, in her heart, and thought it but a poor world where people made so little of anything but money, noise, trouble for their neighbors, and the like.—Life.

Didn't Get Over It.

Two young men were having a heated argument over a problem which needed a great deal of mental calculation.

"I tell you," said one, "that you are entirely wrong."

"But I am not," said the other.

"Didn't I go to school, stupid?" almost roared his opponent.

"Yes," was the calm reply; "and you came back stupid."

That ended it.

Just the Animal He Wants.

"Halloa, Hodge," said Thomson, "what's wrong with that horse?"

"I'm going to sell him," replied Hodge.

"What for?"

"Oh, well, my mother-in-law was driving him yesterday, and he ran away, and gave her such a fright that she has left the house."

"Oh, I say," cried Thomson, eagerly, "I'll buy that horse. What do you want for him?"

Diplomacy.

Watkins—The De Robinsons are giving a big dance next month. I wish they'd invite me.

Roberts—Do you? Then I'll tell you a scheme that generally works. You drop in some night and tell Mrs. De Robinson that you'll be out of town all next month. See if they don't invite you then.

Height of Laziness.

Mifkins—So you consider Dawdles rather lazy, do you?

Bifkins—Lazy! Say, he's the limit. Why, even when he has nothing to do he is too lazy to do it.—Chicago Daily News.

MISUNDERSTOOD.

Old Lady—I see misfortune's laid her hand most cruelly on you, my poor man.

Poor Man—No mum, yer wrong there, it warn't no miss as done it—it was my missus.

A Diamond Composer.

A composer of op'ras galore
Went broke for a twelvemonth or more;
But he's now struck it rich
With the baseball team which Employs him to write out the score.
—Judge.

An Invitation.

"This," said the new editor, looking over the top of his spectacles, "is the most inviting manuscript I have received for a long time."

"What is it?" asked the foreman.

"A poem, beginning, 'Come, drink with me.'"

Where the Crowd Isn't.

"Remember, my boy, there's always room at the top," said the old gentleman.

"There ought to be," retorted the fresh young man. "There are so few people up there."—Chicago Journal.

Well Acquainted.

Gayboy—Well, your father has consented to our marriage. Aren't you surprised?

Miss Willing—Oh, no! You see, papa doesn't know you as well as I do.

A Good Charger.

Client—Didn't you make a mistake in going into law instead of the army?

Lawyer—Why?

Client—By the way you charge, there would be little left of the enemy.

Notice is hereby given that the following Ordinance has been introduced before the Shade Tree Commission, read the second time and ordered engrossed preparatory to its third reading, and that it is the intention of the Commission to adopt the same at the next regular meeting of said Commission to be held at the Mayor's Office, No. 149 North Avenue, Plainfield, N. J., on Monday, the first day of July, 1907, at 7:30 o'clock p. m., at which time and place, all persons interested will be given ample opportunity to be heard thereon before said Commission prior to the proposed adoption of said Ordinance.

ANDREW J. GAVETT, Secretary.
Plainfield, N. J., June 5, 1907.

AN ORDINANCE

Relating to the Protection, Regulation and Control of Shade Trees and City Parks in the City of Plainfield, New Jersey.

The Shade Tree Commission of the City of Plainfield, by virtue of the provisions of the Act of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey entitled "An Act to provide for the planting and care of shade trees on the highways of the municipalities of this State," approved March 24, 1893, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, doth hereby ordain as follows:

Section 1. No person or corporation shall, without the written permit of the Shade Tree Commission, cut, break, climb with spikes, injure or remove any living tree in a public highway, or any tree or plant in a city park, or injure, misuse or remove any device placed to protect such tree or plant, or any structure or device in or around a city park and pertaining thereto, or have possession of any such structure or thing, or any part thereof.

Sec. 2. No person shall enter upon any portion of lawn or ground within a city park when notified by a sign placed in such park, or by a guardian of such park, or by a police officer, not to enter upon such lawn or ground.

Sec. 3. No person shall leave any paper or other waste material in a city park, except in the receptacles which may be provided therein for such material.

Sec. 4. No person shall fasten a horse or other animal to a tree in a public highway of the said city, or in a city park therein, or cause a horse or other animal to stand so that said horse or animal can injure such a tree.

Sec. 5. No person shall, without the written permit of the Shade Tree Commission, attach or keep attached to a tree in a public highway or city park, or to the guard or stake intended for the protection of such a tree, a rope, wire, sign or any device.

Sec. 6. No person shall, without the written permit of the Shade Tree Commission, place, or hereafter maintain, upon the ground in a public highway or city park stone, cement or other substance which shall impede the free entrance of water and air to the roots of a tree in such highway or park without leaving an open space of ground outside the trunk of said tree in area not less than four square feet.

Sec. 7. Throughout the period of the erection or repair of a building or structure the owner thereof shall place such guards around all nearby trees on the public highway as shall effectually prevent injury to such trees.

Sec. 8. Every person or corporation having any wire charged with electricity running through a public highway or park shall securely fasten such wire so that it shall not come into contact with the trunk, or any limb, branch or twig of any tree therein.

Sec. 9. No person or corporation shall prevent, delay or interfere with the Shade Tree Commission or its employes in the planting, pruning, spraying or removing of a tree in a public highway or city park, or in the removal of stone, cement or other substance about the trunk of a tree.

Sec. 10. Every violation by the same person or corporation of any provision of this ordinance on any day or days succeeding the first violation thereof shall constitute an additional violation for each of such succeeding days.

Sec. 11. Any person or corporation violating any of the provisions of this Ordinance shall, upon conviction thereof be punished as follows: For a first offense, by a fine not exceeding fifty dollars; for a second or any subsequent offense, a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding sixty days, or both such fine and imprisonment.

Marshall & Ball Clothing
The Highest Type of Ready-to-Wear.

Spring and Summer Suits
With Built-in Quality

Every manufacturing clothier promises worthy fabrics, and most of them keep their promise. But how many garments show evidence of built-in quality?

In Marshall & Ball Clothes there is an element that finds its source in unusual tailoring care and skill and which is apparent in the finished garment. The permanent shapeliness and made-to-order appearance of Marshall & Ball Clothing are accounted for by thoroughly shrunken interlining and by tailoring skill intelligently applied to the inner as well as the outer parts.

And this built-in element of goodness is a striking feature of even our lowest priced garments.

Here are fabrics aplenty, in the new gray mixtures and plain and fancy blue serges. The models are both radical and conservative in design.

Spring and Summer Suits, $12 to $35.

GOOD FRIDAY BILL OPPISED BY GOVERNOR.

Measure to Make Day a Leagal Holiday Will Not be Signed by the State's Chief Executive.

Trenton, June 7.—Governor Stokes will not sign Senate bill No. 291, making Good Friday a legal holiday. The bill has been the subject of considerable anxiety on the part of the Governor. At first the idea of a holiday on Good Friday was well received, and when the bill was passed on the day before Good Friday it was not signed only because without longer notice it might cause confusion in the banks.

But since then the church people of many denominations have protested against the bill becoming a law and innumerable letters have been received asserting the objection that what is now a religious day would degenerate into a day of sports. So the Governor has laid it away with the forty other bills to be returned to the Legislature on June 18.

It was thought that Hebrews might object to the holiday, but they have been seemingly indifferent and the objections have come only from Christian denominations.

ELKS AFTER BIG PRIZES.

Kansas City Delegation to Reunion at Philadelphia Will Take Along a Steam Calliope.

Kansas City, Mo., June 7.—Kansas City Elks are going after the two big first cash prizes at the Philadelphia reunion of the order next month. They have already spent the larger portion of the proceeds of their recent minstrel show, which netted more than $3,000, in arranging novel features for the big parade.

A steam calliope is to be attached to the Kansas City train on a flat car, and this will make all the noise that the law allows on the way to Philadelphia. The train will consist of twelve cars, each decorated to the limit. A band will accompany the Kansas City Elks, and another band has been engaged in Philadelphia. Forty horses have been hired for the parade.

Cincinnati, June 7.—The big delegation of local Elks are confident they will make such a fine showing at Philadelphia, as to numbers, and with the aid of two bands, that they will capture the big prize offered for the largest number coming the longest distance. The Cincinnati party will consist of fully 500 persons.

Miss Elizabeth Hanley, of East Granville, Vt., is station agent, mail carrier, express agent, baggagemaster and freight agent for the Central Vermont railway. She has held all these offices for two years.

Mrs. Dowie is in very moderate circumstances and will endeavor to make a living by keeping a little summer resort at Muskegon, Mich. It is also said she will write a book laying bare the secrets of Zion City.

Miss Eleanora Sears, of Boston, and Baroness Elizabeth Rosen, daughter of the Russian ambassador to this country, have completed arrangements for a swimming match on the Massachusetts coast this summer.

Miss Ellen Terry, at a reception in New York, talked about the innumerable women who asked her to help them to get on the stage. "The fact is," she said, "every woman under thirty believes she is an actress. And every actress," she added, "believes she is under thirty."

Among the women elected to the Finnish diet are Alexandra von Gripenberg, baroness, and Minna Sillanpaa, president of the Servant Girls' union. The latter was nominated by the Socialists, but supported by the women of all parties on account of her thorough knowledge of conditions among women.

HINTS TO THE HOUSEWIFE.

In cleansing the brass around a keyhole it is almost impossible not to soil the surrounding wood. Get a piece of cardboard about four inches square, cut a hole in it the shape of the brass and put it over the keyhole when cleaning, and the wood will not be touched.

Distilled water is far better than the ordinary kind for greasy skins and all others. An ounce of dried rose leaves in half a pint of vinegar left to stand on them for a week, then adding rose water, is a good remedy. Wash the face with a teaspoonful of this in distilled water and it will prove efficacious on the greasiest skin.

Director Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke of New York's Museum of Art thinks that Pierpont Morgan's great collection, now at South Kensington, may be brought over here eventually. He speaks of a celebrated Eros, a bronze Cupid of large size and one of the most beautiful examples and antique bronze known, said to have cost $30,000.

A telegraph clerk at Turin has invented a new system of telegraphing on trains in motion whereby messages are exchangeable not only with other trains, but also with all the stations along the line and the central telegraph offices. Experiments carried out at Domodossola surpassed expectations, and greetings from a fast express were wired to King Victor Emmanuel.

Like the old Ferris wheel of the Columbian exposition days, the great wheel of Earl's Court, London, will never revolve again. It is being taken down and the steel in it sent to Wales, where, mixed with pig iron and iron ore, it will be converted into steel bars for tin plate making. Biscuit, tobacco and mustard cans will be manufactured from these. The steel of the British warship Montagu will undergo the same fate.

Father Dunphy to Stay.

At the request of the parishioners, Bishop McFaul has rescinded his order transferring Rev. Father Edward J. Dunphy from St. John's Roman Catholic church, Dunellen, to New Monmouth. The Mystery of Carney-Croft

BY JOSEPH BROWN COOKE COPYRIGHT 1907 BY STORY-PRESS CORPORATION

I glanced from my window and saw what appeared to be two people walking slowly down the hillside in the direction of the Bruce cottage. A hasty scrutiny through my field glasses confirmed my suspicion and it seemed that one figure, that of a man, carried an implement like a spade or shovel, while the other was evidently a woman of about the widow's size and general appearance.

I dressed rapidly, and, slipping out of the house, made my way as quickly as I could to the point where I had seen them passing, feeling sure that I would have no difficulty in following their trail through the frost-covered grass.

It was all I had expected, and I walked rapidly up the hill, retracing the path they had made, and, occasionally leaving the trail where it led too directly through the open, and slinking along in the shadow of the hedges until I could again take it up with safety.

About half way up the incline I turned and looked down toward the Bruce cottage, from the chimney of which a black column of smoke was pouring and whose windows were brightly lighted as if something of importance was going on within.

As I looked, and I had taken the precaution to bring my binoculars with me, a man emerged from the house and I had no difficulty in making him out to be Jenks, the stage driver. He was followed in a moment by Mrs. Bruce and the two stood for some time in earnest conversation, after which the man strode rapidly down the road and the woman reentered the house.

It had seemed to me that the widow and Jenks were quarreling, for, during their talk, he had gesticulated violently and shown every evidence of extreme earnestness, if not of actual anger; but they must have come to some sort of an agreement at last, for he waved his hand pleasantly as he left her and she returned his salutation by throwing him a kiss as coyly as a schoolgirl.

The first thing the woman did after entering the house was to extinguish the lights, no longer necessary, as the rays of the sun began to touch the hilltops, and I was just lowering my glass when I caught a fleeting glimpse of another man, darting around the corner of the building and disappearing behind the woodpile. I watched in vain for him to show himself again, but he did not, and finally, I turned and followed the trail once more, making all possible haste, lest I should lose it when the frost disappeared.

The foot prints led me up on the hill and around to the side away from the house and, at length, became lost in a grove of hemlocks under which there was no tell-tale frost. For a time it seemed that my efforts were to prove of no avail, and that I might as well return home, but the more I thought of the matter the more I was convinced that these people had been out for no good purpose, and that it was my duty to learn, if possible, what mischief they had been contriving at this early hour and where they had been.

In fact, I suddenly realized that I had not taken a proper interest in the mysterious happenings at Carney-Croft and that while it had seemed quite enough to bring them to a stand still, as far as outward appearances were concerned, they were, in reality, of far too great importance to let pass so easily.

Miss Weston's connection with the affair gave a new aspect to it, of course, and while I was bound by my word to respect her secret there was nothing in my promise to her to prevent me from using every legitimate means to find out all that I could on my own account and make use of such knowledge as I might acquire in any way that would best serve my purposes without reacting on her.

Since I had come to a correct understanding of my position in regard to Miss Carney, it seemed imperative that I should probe this whole affair to the bottom, if for no other reason than to show my devotion to her and her interests.

I wandered about, more or less aimlessly, in the grove until, as I was on the point of leaving in chagrin, I again discovered the tracks in the frost leading across a little open space from another and denser grove near by. I plunged at once into this and had no trouble in directing my steps through the underbrush, which was broken and bent in many places and showed plainly the course taken by the man and woman but a short time before.

After going on in this way for some little distance I suddenly found myself in a small clearing under the branches of the overtowering trees, and saw, to my horror, an oblong space of newly turned earth which bore every resemblance in size and general appearance to a grave.

For several minutes I stood spell-bound with fear and dread and then, summoning up all my courage and with a cold sweat standing out on my body, I began to dig down in the soft brown earth, using a stick that was lying near by, and even my hands, to remove the stones and larger clumps of soil.

About a foot below the surface I came upon a bundle wrapped in cloths of the same kind in every way as those found by MacArdel and myself on the night when we first saw the ghosts and shot at Jenks.

I could bear no more for the moment, and quaking visibly, I rose from the ground and leaned against a tree for support. Then, for the first time, I saw that there were many other little mounds surrounding the one I had opened and—but I had reached the limit of my endurance, and, with pallid face, I dashed madly down the hill toward Carney-Croft.

CHAPTER XX.

Innocence Established.

Miss Carney was not at breakfast, nor did she show herself during the day, and my inquiries concerning her elicited the information that she was constantly with Miss Weston, whose condition had become truly alarming.

I wrote to John Carney, as his sister had asked me to do, telling him all that I knew of Miss Weston's condition and of her strange connection with the mystery of Carney-Croft which, for the first time, I recited to him in full. Moreover, on the bare chance that he might, through his previous intimacy with Miss Weston, be in possession of knowledge that would give me a clew if not actually explain the present inexplicable occurrences, I asked him to cable me immediately any facts that might help to clear up the situation and put me on the right track in my war against the Bruce woman and her allies.

I did this, hardly thinking that he could be of any material assistance to me in my investigations, but, rather than leave any stone unturned, I related in detail the events of the last few months, not omitting my experience of the morning in the little hillside graveyard, and I closed by urging him most earnestly to return home by the first steamer.

This letter I posted at once, so that it would catch the next mail boat for England, and, to make sure that it would reach him promptly, I cabled to his bankers that an important letter was on its way and asked them to recall him at once to London if he was at any distant point.

When these matters were attended to I again set to work to organize a plan of campaign against the Bruce gang, and, as a preliminary step, I went into the village and made all the inquiries that I judiciously could

To my surprise I found that she was respected and held in the highest esteem by the townspeople, and prominent in all the good work of the parish. Some of the people even said that she gave so much of her meager income to charity that she often suffered herself for the ordinary comforts of life.

As to Jenks, I could only learn that he was an honest, trustworthy fellow, that he was ardently devoted to the Widow Bruce, but, with it all, I could not find a soul to say a word against the character of either; unless Jenks' keenness in striking a bargain, and the businesslike way in which he brought home the intoxicated frequenters of Hoskins' hotel when they had the money for their fare, and left them to get home as best they could when they had not, could be laid up against him as a crime.

His own occasional potations seemed to be entirely overlooked by the townspeople in general, or else wholly unknown to them, and, taking everything into consideration, Jenks seemed to be regarded by the community as a pretty fair sort of a citizen.

With these facts in my mind I tried to reconcile the doings of the early morning, as well as the other happenings of which I was cognizant, with the reputations borne by Jenks and the Bruce woman, and I freely confess that I soon became completely bewildered.

It must be admitted that I had no positive assurance that the little graves up on the hill contained the bodies of infants, except that their general appearance suggested as much, and the fragments of bone that I had seen served as a mute witness of some ghastly crime.

MacArdel, too, had identified the odor of the rags beyond all question of doubt, at least as far as he was concerned, but it still must be remembered that I had not opened the parcel and that I had no way of knowing that it contained anything more than rags, as did the one that we had examined so carefully in the summer.

The more I thought of it the less I was able to make out of it, and, finally, as I had determined to take a walk, and was leaving the house for this purpose, my astonishment was increased by meeting the widow face to face in the hallway as I descended the stairs.

She was dressed neatly in freshly laundered calico, with an immaculate apron of generous propostions, and, in her hand, she held a tray with a cup and some plates on it. We gazed at each other for an instant and then I said, in as unconcerned a tone as I could muster up for the occasion:

"Good afternoon, Mrs. Bruce. Do you remember me? I am Mr. Ware, you know."

"Oh, yes, sir," she replied, bowing pleasantly as she spoke, "I remember you very well indeed, sir."

I smiled at this in spite of myself and stopped her as she would have passed me and gone up the stairs.

"What are you doing here, Mrs. Bruce?" I asked. "I had no idea of meeting you in this way."

"Why you know, sir, I was a nurse in the old country, sir," she returned, in the same sweetly modulated voice that I had noticed before, "and when the young lady took so bad, sir, they sent for me to take care of her until the 'ospital nurses came from town."

"Who sent for you?" I continued curiously, again impeding her progress up the stairs.

"Miss Carney, of course," she rejoined. "She asked the rector and he recommended me most 'ighly, sir. You know I do most of the nursing in critical cases 'ereabouts, when I can find the time for it, sir."

She caught her breath at this last clause, as if she would have wished it unsaid, and blushed violently as I remarked: "You are very busy most of the time, I presume?"

"Yes ,sir, I am, sir," she retorted, defiantly, "and my business is my own, sir, and it ill becomes outsiders to meddle with it!"

With these remarkable words she swept past me and proceeded to Miss Weston's room with all the importance of an idealized Sairy Gamp from whom the objectionable qualities had been eliminated.

As I watched her ascend the stairs with a little self-reliant poise to her head and a manner of absolute nonchalance, I came to the sudden and positive conclusion that the woman had not a bad trait in her makeup, and that the only way to deal with her was to approach her frankly and in all honesty of purpose. I was convinced, too, that Miss Weston had played no small part in persuading Miss Carney to send for her as a nurse, and I wondered how and through what sort of argument she had been induced to admit to her house a woman whom she had every reason to suspect of bearing her no great amount of good will.

From the housekeeper, who chanced to pass through the hall, I learned that the nurses from town were expected on the evening train, and that Mrs. Bruce would go home as soon as they arrived, and I determined to see her and talk with her that very night at her cottage.

Shortly after dinner, which, like all the other meals of the day, had been conspicuous by Miss Carney's absence, I again started out in the direction of the widow's house, and arrived just in time to find her and Jenks in heated arguments at the gate.

I slackened my pace as I saw them standing in the light of the doorway and, feeling that the circumstances warranted me in playing the part of eavesdropper, I stepped stealthily forward in the shadow of the shrubbery until I was within hearing distance.

"Wal!" Jenks was saying doggedly, "th' hull thing's baout teh come aout 'fore long an' ye might's well tell me naow an' hev done wit it!"

"I'll tell you when the time comes, Sam," she said, soothingly, and then she added something in a tone so low that I could not hear.

"Course I'll trust ye, Matilda," said Jenks earnestly and in evident response to her last remark. "Hain't I allus trusted ye frum th' start; an' got them pesky bundles fur ye, an' buried 'em, too, 'thaout never askin' no questions? But I tell ye, Matilda, th' hull thing's comin' aout 'fore long, an', what's more, that lawyer cuss wuz up on th' hill this mornin' right after we left, an' dug up th' last one we planted."

"What!" she gasped, setzing him by the arm, "did he open the parcel an see what was in it or—or take it away with him, Sam?"

"No," said the man, "he didn't do nuthin' to it, 'cept scratch th' dirt off th' top, an' when he got a whiff of it I guess it wuz all he wanted, fur when I seen him he was a-comin' daown th' hill like th' old Nick wuz after him. I surmised what he'd been up to, an' so I went back an' covered it up again."

"Thank God for that," she murmured, "and you did not touch it or open it yourself, did you, Sam?"

"No," he replied, "I jest left it lay, like you've allus told me to do, an' covered it up again 'thaout askin' no questions, one way nor tother. But I tell ye, Matilda, it's all goin' teh be known 'fore long, an' I do wish ye'd tell me naow, 'fore it's too late."

"Yes!" I exclaimed, stepping suddenly before them, "and I wish you'd tell me, too, Mrs. Bruce."

They sprang back in amazement, and for an instant I thought that Jenks was going to strike at me, but I continued earnestly:

"I have come here as your friend to-night to ask and beg of you an explanation of this mystery that is upsetting the whole place. I know, Mrs. Bruce, that you can put everything to rights if you will, and I am prepared to do almost anything that you want me to if you will only made a clean breast of the whole business. I don't believe there's been any very great wrong on your part, Mrs. Bruce, although I must admit that I did think so at one time, and I want to say now that I am sincerely sorry for the manner in which Dr. MacArdel and I treated you both last summer."

They said nothing, and after pausing for a moment, I continued:

"As I say, I come here as a friend to ask you to explain this matter once and for all, or at least go away and leave us in peace."

"Oh, I can't go away, sir!" exclaimed Mrs. Bruce. "I can't do that, sir, whatever you ask, and I can't tell you anything, either, for the present, sir."

"Oh, nonsense!" I cried impatiently. "You can tell me just as well as not, and I give you my word that you can trust me in every way if you will only take the right view of this thing and side with me in helping to rid Carney-Croft of all further annoyance."

"No," she returned, weeping silently. "I can't tell you anything now, sir, although I say it with no disrespect. As you are a friend of Miss Carney and the other lady, don't ask it of me, I beg."

"The other lady?" I exclaimed in amazement, and with some sudden suspicion in my tone. "Do you mean to say that you don't remember her name when you know her well enough to have written her so many letters that she is perfectly familiar with your hand, and you have even had her here in your house?"

"Written her letters?" cried Mrs. Bruce in a bewildered tone. "Why, sir, I—"

Here she was interrupted by Jenks, who suddenly broke out into guffaws of uncontrollable mirth.

Mrs. Bruce eyed him in a puzzled way for a moment, as if she thought he had lost his mind and then, coming to my side, she drew my head toward her and whispered in my ear:

"In God's name, sir, trust me as you would yourself and ask no questions about the letters or anything else. Do this, for pity's sake, and for the sake of the sweet young lady you love."

CHAPTER XXI.

An Amphibian Mystery.

My astonishment at this last remark of the Bruce woman was beyond expression, and, grasping her somewhat rudely by the arm, I exclaimed:

"What do you mean by that? Explain yourself at once!"

"You know well enough what I mean, and who I mean, sir," she replied in a whisper, placing her mouth close to my ear as she spoke. "As you love Miss Carney, and as you value her happiness, sir, you must trust me and ask no questions now."

I pondered deeply for a moment before I answered her and then I said, in a low tone:

"You are asking a great deal of me, Mrs. Bruce. You must remember that I am Miss Carney's legal adviser and that I am in duty bound to look out for her interests. This thing has gone quite far enough already, and yet matters are growing more and more mysterious. I heard Jenks tell you that I was up on the hill this morning, and I have no wish to deny it, but I saw something there that must be explained at once or I shall notify the authorities; and, for my part, I do not see how it can be explained at all."

"What did you see, sir?" she gasped, as if in great mental distress.

"Well," I replied, slowly, "I saw a number of little graves, or what appeared to be such."

"Oh, my God!" she moaned, covering her face with her hands, "I did not think anything like that could happen! I should have burned them, sir. Oh, why didn't I burn them! It would have been much safer!"

Jenks had slunk into the house, leaving us to ourselves, and I was enabled to talk more freely.

"Look here, woman!" I exclaimed. "What in the name of heaven does all this mean? Speak, or by all that's holy I'll have you in jail before morning!"

THE DEBT

By CHARLES EDMOND WALK

(Copyright, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

As silent, and as awesome in her silence, as a sphynx, sat Sibyl Clayton, alone with her dead husband. Hours had passed since she had dismissed the few kindly-intentioned neighbors whose services she did not want, and during those hours not a muscle of her tall, slender figure had moved, not a change had passed over the beautiful, pallid face. The tiny parlor, shabby and bare, was but dimly lighted. An incomer could have been at first sensible only of the darkness; but, as sight adapted itself to the interior twilight, he would have been bold indeed not to have shrunk in dread from that terrible, immobile figure and the sinister glitter of her baleful eyes.

For Sibyl Clayton was thinking not so much of her husband's death as the manner of it, and she was praying with an intensity of fervor that was fast consuming her vitality, praying, pleading, offering her soul in exchange for means of avenging that death. It had required 12 years to do it, but here, at last, Philip Clayton lay dead, and to her tortured spirit his murderer seemed as far above any earthly punishment as the very stars.

Was it really so many years ago that she had considered herself the happiest girl in all the world, only to learn that she knew not what happiness was until Phil Clayton came wooing? It seemed but yesterday, and yet the 12 years were like unto as many centuries of torture and agony. For a serpent entered her paradise.

In those halcyon days, wherever there was a man who laid his two eyes upon her, she numbered an admirer; where she bestowed the merest glance in return, a lover. She had more than glanced at Phil. Indeed, her eyes had become hazy while looking into his; they presently fell from before his ardent look; a rich tide of color mounted to her cheeks, and from that moment she was his, body and soul. There were times when she regarded her passion for Phil Clayton with awe and fear, so wildly it grappled her.

But the conquest had not been one-sided by any means, for Phil loved her with all the ardor that his deep nature and her wonderful beauty could inspire.

Neil Black had loved her, too, however—so vehemently and selfishly that he had devoted his life to revenging himself upon the successful rival The words of his threat still rang in Sibyl Clayton's ears. He had spoken with a deadly quiet that made her turn swiftly to shield her lover with her own body; but Neil Black had merely laughed at her, and as he laughed she had shivered.

"Mark me well, Clayton"—the words now started out from the tumult of her brain with the suddenness of a cry—"you have taken from me the one thing I have desired above the whole world. You know I am ambitious for wealth and power; that I crave the good things of life and enjoy them; that I have won everything upon which I have set my heart. I would toss them all away for that woman—aye, even my life in exchange for a year with her, with or without her love—and do you think that I will stand idly by and see her plucked from me?" And here again he had laughed that terrible laugh. "You were born with wealth, Clayton; so was she. But I fought a bitter fight for mine, and I mean to be cheated of nothing.

"Now hear me: I am going to devote every minute of my life to make of yours a blackened wilderness—to change the sweet fruit of your love to ashes upon your lips; I am going to pit my strength against yours—my wealth, my brain, against your wealth and your brain—until you curse the day that you were born." Then he had bowed low and left them.

And how well had Neil Black succeeded! Every undertaking of her husband's had brought him only loss. He had not been a man to shrink from such a challenge—nay, he had even laughed at it; but the time soon came when he had to buckle on his armor in grim earnest, only to behold lance after lance broken against the impregnable front of his enemy, while that enemy's web encompassed him closer and closer with the passing years. One night Philip and Sibyl Clayton looked into each other's eyes and silently read therein the ruin that was theirs.

But that was not all. As the Clayton fortunes dwindled, as each succeeding enterprise met failure and disaster, Neil Black had waxed and grown greater until he was a man to be reckoned with in the world. He held many invisible but powerful strings in his hands, and at the end of each was a puppet that danced as its master pulled its own particular string. Some of the puppets were in humble walks of life, some in high; some were among great corporations, and a few even on the bench. They numbered legislators and senators, ward-heelers and mayors, but one and all danced obediently when he pulled the strings. And so, with a bit of artful preparation, the aligning of a few innocent appearing circumstances, it had been an easy matter to fasten a crime upon Philip Clayton and break his proud spirit. He had been humbled to the dust, his heart broken.

Such was the past that Sibyl Clayton looked back upon as she sat alone with her dead husband. What of the future?

Phil Clayton was buried, and the widow's fierce prayers went up unceasingly to whatever power of darkness she had come to look for aid in her revenge.

One day on a little table beside her lay an open letter, at which she glanced from time to time, as if turning its contents over and over in her mind. It was a proposal of marriage from Neil Black. Its reception had occasioned her no shock; the instant she had comprehended its import her mind had clutched at it as a possible means to her desire, but as yet she had found no light. She patiently sought to adapt it to every embryonic scheme that tried to shape itself in her thoughts; and one day she rose up and went forth to seek the man of her hatred.

There could be no doubt—he still loved her, if such a passion could be termed love. Her hatred was such that she could accept his wooing without a tremor of repugnance, sitting calmly by and reading him coldly, considering carefully his every word and every movement.

Sitting and brooding in the shabby parlor one afternoon, Sibyl fell into a slumber; but even then she was conscious of praying, praying, praying that the way to vengeance be shown her. And as she slept, suddenly there came to her a vision.

First, the long, waving locks of her hair became unbound and fell about her, a matchless mantle of gold, to the floor; then, one by one, her garments dissolved away, and her body, like a flawless image of marble, gleamed in the dim light. She knew that her eyes were shut and that she was incapable of any sound or motion, yet it was as if she were awake and another individual watching all these strange things happen to herself. After awhile a vague, black figure began to take shape before her. Its head—if it possessed one—was shrouded in a sable robe, that hid every outline; but she was conscious of a powerful personality, calmly, quietly regarding her, and, too, it seemed weighed down with an infinite sadness. Presently a hand stretched forth and touched her above the heart and she shrank back with a shriek. The touch burned her flesh like hot iron. Then she awoke, to find herself clothed, although her beautiful hair was really unbound, and the spot above her heart still burned. As she essayed to rise, she fell fainting to the floor.

When consciousness came again to Sibyl Clayton she knew that she was a sick woman. It was an effort for her to make her way to the old family physician—a specialist of renown—but she was driven on by desperation. Was revenge to be taken from her before she had even planned a single blow?

She showed him the spot above her heart—where the finger had touched her—and in solemn tones the great physician pronounced her doom. She never knew how she found her way back to the little parlor.

In a week Sibyl Clayton and Neil Black were married. The months sped, and people remarked that they were happy, but that Sibyl was wonderfully changed. Except for the unnatural thread of scarlet marking her lips her face was as pallid as a lily, and her sapphire eyes still glowed like two stars. Every morning, while her husband slept, she bared his breast and searched it with the fierce hunger of a wolf.

One morning she found what she sought, and silently she fell forward and buried her teeth in his throat.

With a curse he threw her from him and, half awake, sprang from the bed. She laughed and wiped the blood from her lips.

"God, woman!" he cried, catching the light in her eyes, "are you mad?"

She studied him a moment as he stood clawing at his throat, and then pointed to a chair.

"Sit there," she said, quietly, "and see if you can find any comfort in the thought of my being mad—after you have heard what I have to say."

She lay her heart bare before him, while he sat helpless and fascinated; the deadly hatred for him that burned there, and told of the vision:

"See, Neil Black—here is the spot upon my breast; look at your own. Think of the good things of this life, and what they mean to you, and then look into the future and behold how hideous a specter stares you in the face. Neil Black, you cursed leper!—my husband, my lover, is avenged!"

With a sudden movement she put a hand to her mouth, and he heard the crunching of glass between her teeth. The man was helpless to move. He could only sit horrrified, staring at her with glassy eyes, and in a moment a little cry escaped her and she sank motionless to the floor.

But the man, from that instant, lest the nerve to follow the example set by her. He could only live on and on in the hell she had made for him.

Something in Her Name.

"My name was Katherine Slobig," she explained plaintively, "but now that I am to be taken abroad with the company the manager had concluded to change my name. He says mine is not euphonious or something. I am called on the programme 'Katherine Schuyler.' I don't like it half so well, but what are you to do?

"I am not married, you know. That's the worst of it, to have to change your name and not be married; but now I sign myself in my letters, 'Katherine Schuyler, nee Slobig.'"

A BOX OF CIGARS

By CHESTER BARNETT.

(Copyright, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

Sharley closed the ledger with a resounding whack, slid the big volume into place, swept the litter of sales-books into a stack, raked pens, pencils, erasers and paper cutters into a drawer and, glancing up, looked into the uncompromising barrel of a tremendous black revolver. The lively tune which he had started whistling on finishing work ended on a high staccato.

"Don't move," the owner of the revolver said softly.

Sharley acted on the suggestion. A tall man, with the shoulders of an athlete, confronted him. The lower half of his face was covered by a China silk handkerchief, while a neat slouch hat was pulled down over his forehead.

"Mr. Raffles, I believe?" politely inferred Sharley.

"Humph! Why, yes, sir. And I have the pleasure of addressing a man equally famous, Mr. Jack Sharley, expert accountant? Oblige me by permitting your right hand to remain quiet. It displays a tendency to move toward that drawer. If you will allow me, our interests are centered in the safe behind you, and not in the desk."

"What!" said Sharley in mock surprise. "Are you interested in that, too? Then we have another tie that binds. What that safe contains, and what it should contain, constitute the terms of the hardest proposition that I have tried to solve for many moons. The gentleman whose work I am going over seems not only to have been a scoundrel, but a fool as well."

The burglar's eyes expressed more or less surprise.

"I'll tell you what, Mr. Bur—er—Raffles, I'm glad you came along! I've a proposition to make."

Sharley paused, deliberating. The burglar watched him narrowly, with suspicious eyes studying each line of the bookkeeper's thin, expressive face.

"See here, old man, put up your gun there. I'm with you in this job."

A pause ensued, broken finally by a laugh from the burglar.

"You are d— accommodating. Sorry to say so, but I don't think I can use you. I believe I can manage it myself."

Sharley's face flushed a threatening red.

"You do what I tell you, and we will both get along better," continued the thief. "There's fifteen hundred dollars in that safe to-night, and I'll ask you to unlock the door and fork "over."

"Fifteen hundred!" Sharley laughed scornfully. "Why, man, you can take your paltry fifteen hundred. But if you are with me in this, it is fifteen thousand we are after."

The masked man started at this. Doubt struggled with greed for a moment before he answered.

"Well, I've got the drop on you, so I can afford to be magnanimous. What is your yarn about fifteen thousand dollars?"

"I'll spin no yarns while that cannon is smiling in my face. I tell you, the money's in the job. And there is nobody on earth, outside of old Shipley and myself, who knows how to get at it. If you want to hear the plan, you can take the pistol out of this drawer and lay it alongside of your own on the counter there, out of reach. Otherwise you can count me out of it altogether."

The burglar looked at Sharley's figure, pondered for a moment and, without taking his eyes off the other, walked around the desk. Opening the drawer in front of Sharley, he removed the pistol.

"Allow me," he remarked, passing his hand over Sharley's pockets. Finding no weapon upon the bookkeeper's person, he walked to the counter indicated by Sharley and deposited the two pistols. He then stationed himself midway between Sharley and the counter.

Sharley lowered his voice to an intense whisper.

"First, you must understand that I must be kept in the clear on this. On the discovery that the money is gone, if there is not perfect evidence to the contrary, I will most certainly be nabbed as the thief, because no one but the president of the firm and myself knows where the money is. For your part, you will be taking no more risks than if you had got only the fifteen hundred. You agree to that?"

"Yes! Go on."

"Then this is the chance I've been waiting for," whispered Sharley hoarsely, in uncontrolled agitation. "I'll tell you why I called that d—Dowd a fool awhile ago. The head of the firm has always been afraid of banks, and has kept the net earnings of several years right under that fellow's nose, and Dowd kept blissfully at work pocketing what daily collections he could and trying to keep the books so queered that no one would catch the discrepancies. The fool could have skipped with the whole pile and settled down to a quiet and independent leisure. Still, the man is in other respects clever.

"Though I have never seen him, I have been employed to straighten out books that he has queered no less than six different times in the last five years. I've never known him to make a bobble before. The fake entries in his books have always figured out in the balance, so that the firms he has buncoed could grin and bear their loss without prejudice to their customers, and so were able to continue in business.

"But here he has blundered in his books. There was a bill of six hundred and fifty dollars paid to the house two weeks before Dowd absconded. It came by mail, it is supposed. Dowd issued no receipt for it. Neither did he make any entry in the books. Now, two firms claim to have paid up their accounts, both of which aggregated six hundred and fifty. And besides laying himself open to exposure, Dowd has jeopardized the trade of the two best customers of the house.

"The company is willing to stand the loss of the six-fifty, besides numerous smaller ones, provided Dowd will furnish the information as to who paid the amount. If he refuses, the old man is going to put five hundred dollars on his head."

"Oh, let up! Jones & Dock paid the money," said the burglar, half involuntarily. "Get on trail of that fifteen thousand, will you?" he added, angrily.

"I thought you could tell me about it," smiled Sharley, "judging by that yellow stain on the tip of your ring finger. They use a peculiar ink here that is very hard to get off one's fingers. Well, Mr. Dowd, about the fifteen thousand. Each evening before he closed the safe, you remember, the old man would bring a cigar box down from his private office. The box was a large one and was supposed to contain Havanas of a superb quality, with which he would regale favorite customers. Indeed, there was a layer or two of cigars on top.

"But beneath these the old fellow stowed away all cash profits, after converting them into bills of large denomination. No one dared to touch the cigars, for the old man was jealous of them—as well he might be. One clerk was discharged for pilfering one cigar from the box." Sharley lowered his voice still more and pointed a trembling finger toward the safe.

"That box is still there."

The burglar's eyes sparkled with fierce brightness. He made a movement toward the safe.

"Wait till we finish our plan," urged the auditor sharply. "The door of the safe must show damage in order that suspicion will not turn to me. This window must be tampered with, too. I don't want to run my head into a noose."

"Go ahead. We agreed on that. We can 'tend to the 'damage' later."

"All right. By the way, you are sure that Jones & Dock paid the six-fifty?"

"Yes, and if you need it, there's a list of the other collections that fail to appear in the books," and the burglar produced a paper from his pocketbook. "Now get out the box. The old fool never gave me the combination. I admire his sagacity in giving it to you." He could not forego the sarcasm, though he was trembling with eagerness.

Sharley leaned over and spun the combination of the safe. The heavy bolts clinked and Sharley jerked open the door.

"Here it is. And we will smoke one of the major's cigars to his better health."

"D— his cigars. Show me what's underneath and be quick about it. If Dick Dowd was a fool, he is one no longer. You can have the cigars, the rest is mine. Hand it over, Mr. Sharley!"

Sharley's lips straightened. He scraped aside the top layer of cigars and drew out a silver-plated Colt's that nestled snugly underneath.

"Kindly put up your hands as high as you can conveniently, Mr. Dowd, and 'oblige' me by not moving for a moment. Did I not expressly state that the money had been in the box? It was taken to the First National this morning and this little trifle took its place."

While speaking Sharley had moved slowly around the desk. Seeing his purpose, Dowd suddenly brought down his right hand in a swinging half circle, aiming a blow which, had it landed, would have put the Colt's out of reach. Though Sharley evaded the blow, his aim was lost for a moment. Instantly the burglar sprang toward the counter where lay the two revolvers. Sharley employed an old schoolboy trick that has served many a man after schoolboy days are over. As his adversary sprang, he thrust his foot between the man's legs, and the burglar came to the floor with a terrific crash.

Sharley stepped to the counter and pocketed the revolvers.

"Don't be ill-natured. After favoring me with the information about the six-fifty—which, by the way, will assist me out of a bad tangle—I had thought better of you. Kindly step with me to the front door till an officer happens along. You first, please."

The burglar arose and led the way with sullen obedience.

Sagacity of Ancients.

Many quotations came from the works of Thales, the Greek philosopher and one of the seven wise men. It was he who said, "Know thyself;" "Few words are a sign of prudent judgment;" "Search after wisdom, and choose what is most worthy;" "There is nothing more beautiful than the world;" "Time is the wisest thing, for it invents and discovers all things."

He also said that it was the hardest thing in the world to know oneself, and the easiest to admonish another. In his youth Thales was urged to marry; but he said, "It is too soon;" and later in life, upon being urged again, he said, "It is too late."

Bad Dream.

"How did the Chinese get their idea of a dragon as their national emblem?"

"I don't know," answered the unscientific person; "but it probably had its origin in the opium habit."

HORSE SHOW EXHIBITORS GUESTS OF DRIVING CLUB

Annual Dinner in their Honor Given With Great Success at the Casino Last Night.

MAYOR FISK PRESIDES

Vaudeville Entertainment and Speeches a Feature of the Program —Colonel Jay's Witty Address.

The annual dinner in connection with the horse show being held under the auspices of the Plainfield Riding and Driving Club, was given at the Casino, last night, for the exhibitors and a number of their friends. It afforded a jolly good time for everyone and it was early this morning when the affair terminated. An excellent dinner was served under the direction of David Shay, steward at the Plainfield Country Club, after which there were speeches.

The feature of the evening was the vaudeville entertainment planned by a committee consisting of Lewis E. Waring, Joseph M. Shellabarger and George A. Beaton. The artists were from the Keith-Proctor circuit and they gave a number of clever sketches in the song and dance line, and musical specialties. A trio of Japanese acrobats also pleased the guests with their fine performance. The vaudeville continued while the dinner was being served, after which the speech-making began. Mayor Charles J. Fisk presided as toastmaster and he introduced the various speakers.

Wilfred Jay, of "The Rider and Driver," started the ball a-rolling. He said: "Thank you for calling upon me. I had almost given up all hopes of speaking here tonight, but the fact of the matter is, if you had not called on me I would have got up and spoke anyway. If there is any one time that I am to be taken seriously and at the same time to be believed it is when I am silent, but this is an occasion where I feel compelled to speak right out in meeting.

"Down here near the calm of the Watchung Valley there is a voice raised to acclaim of good fellowship that may well be echoed down through the horse show welkin and I don't think that it is an extraordinary or exaggerated statement when I say that we are probably the most happy and contented individuals who have had the good fortune to commingle at an opportune moment such as this. Now that was rather a long speech for a poor speaker. I was going to say—bad speaker, but my egotism would not permit it.

"Happy, happy, is the community whose bell wether has so congenial a flock who like our late lamented lassie, "Edna May," advised in her song, "Follow On, Follow On," and in doing so find their faith rewarded with an achievement such as yours. You have had lots of nice things said about you and you deserve them. There is very little left to express either by an ingenious or studied orator. Unfortunately, I am not in the harness business or I might become interesting.

"To go back to the impossibility of complimenting the Plainfield Horse Show, and its local champions, the only gratifying observation that I think might be judiciously indulged in, is—That if Long Branch don't look out it will be a case of 'Casey at The Bat.'"

Among the other speakers were Dr. Earl Budd, of Morristown; Edwin S. Hooley, Dr. C. Shirley Carter, J. E. Davis, all exhibitors and several other guests. There was a genuine feeling of good fellowship and all agreed that the fourth annual horse show of the Plainfield Riding and Driving Club was "the best ever."

At a late hour, after the Knights of Columbus carnival was over; some of the specialties were brought to the Casino and entertained for awhile.

All of the exhibitors were much pleased with the hospitality of the club and the treatment accorded at the show and gave expression to their fellings of appreciation.

Festival a Success.

The strawberry and ice cream festival arranged by the women of Grace M. E. church was concluded last night. There was a good attendance, and everything was sold out. The program was the same as on Thursday night and was fully enjoyed by those present. The affair was considered a success in every way. The exact profits will not be known for a few days.

POLITICIANS ACTIVE ON CARNIVAL MIDWAY

DON'T BARK, BUT SPEND THEIR MONEY WITH JOYOUS ABANDON.

Politicians were at the carnival in more or less force last night. It was their turn to boom things and swell the stream of shekels pouring Knights of Columbus way, and some of them responded to the call. Not so many of the political lights as might have appeared were in evidence, but there were enough to help keep the noise of loose change in the air. The general attendance was not so large as on the night before, the crowd being estimated at between 5,000 and 6,000.

There were no changes in the bills. The shows all did a good business and so did the minor attractions. More business might have been done if the political boosters had barked a bit, but they seemed afflicted with coyness and hooted not a hoot for increased traffic, thus losing many good opportunities to make old foes wrench their tender pocketbooks.

The police increased their activity against the small boy nuisance. The youngsters had developed a special fondness for whacking people with yardsticks given out by a department store as advertisements, and the complaints from the stung people filled the ears of the officers. They made a systematic raid on the boys and took all the sticks away.

The carnival will close tonight. With good weather the attendance should be big enough to swamp all the attractions.

TWO POPULAR GRADUATES.

Pupils of Greenbrook Road School Receive Many Gifts and Bouquets.

For the first time in eleven years, graduating exercises were held at the Greenbrook road school last night. The school room was packed, and the program went off with unqualified success.

The graduates were Miss Violet Titus and Miss Emma Tetlow. They graduated with honors, and received many bouquets and gifts from friends and relatives. G. Smith presented them with their diplomas. Rev. E. C. Dutcher delivered the address.

The program:

Ella Biggs, A Child's Troubles; singing by five boys, "We'll Stand by Our Flag;" dictation, "School's Close," Emilia Biggs; recitation, "Her Graduation," Louisa Cramer; singing, "The Old School House Good-bye;" dialogue, six children; dictation, "A Speech for a Little Boy," Louis Fuchs; song, Misses Violet Titus and Emma Tetlow; "Good Night, but Not Good-bye;" closing address, Frances Fuchs; singing by school; recitation, "Welcome Address," George Miller; recitation, "Miss First Speech," Rose Titus; recitation, "From Day to Day," Carl Fuchs; delsarte movements, ten children; recitation, "Barbara Fretichie," Lily Titus; essay, Miss Violet Titus; singing by school, "Among the Golden Grain;" recitation, Hildred Biggs, "Little Chatter Box;" recitation, Kasper Fuchs, "Charge of the Light Brigade;" singing by school, "Sing and Float;" scarf drill, eight scholars; recitation, Florence Voorhees, "Singing Lesson;" recitation, "In Distress," Howard Titus; essay, Miss Emma Tetlow.

Jailed for Contempt.

In the Somerset county courts yesterday Joseph Sansone and Delvina, his wife, were haled before Judge Schenck on a rule to show cause why they should not be adjudged guilty of contempt. In the recent trial of Annie Salsberger they were subpoenaed to appear as witnesses, but failed to show up. In the case of Sansone the rule was made absolute and he was committed to the county jail to appear June 14, when he will be permitted to present his defense. In the case of his wife the rule was vacated, because she proved that she was too ill to attend court at the time the trial was in progress.

John P. Apgar.

John P. Apgar, of Dunellen, died this morning shortly after 9 o'clock, of a complication of diseases. He had been ill for some time. Mr. Apgar was a veteran contractor and carpenter. He was prominent in his work about Somerset county, and to a great extent in this city. He leaves three sons, J. Newton Apgar, Willard Apgar and George Apgar, all of Dunellen. The funeral will be held Tuesday afternoon, at 2.30 o'clock, from the residence of Willard Apgar, 115 Lincoln avenue, Dunellen. The burial will be at Hillside cemetery.

Musical Service.

The musical service postponed last Sunday will be given at the First M. E. church tomorrow night. An elaborate program has been prepared.

HASSAM PAVEMENT TEST

Borough Council Votes to Lay Strip of It Two Blocks Long.

AS TO STONE CRUSHING

Mayor Smalley Makes Reply to W. L. Saunders—Dunellen and Greenbrook Sewer Bed Protests Filed.

Test of the Hassam concrete pavement, which an agent of the company controlling it advocated at the Board of Trade meeting last month as the best thing for the city's business streets, will be made by North Plainfield. The Borough Council, at its monthly meeting, last night, authorized the street committee to make arrangements for the laying of the pavement on Somerset street, on the section between the trolley track and the west walk, between Lincoln and Park places.

The resolution, which was introduced by Councilman Waldron, of the street committee(provides that the total cost of the strip shall not be more than $1,600, and that a third of the cost be borne by the Public Service Corporation, and another third by the property owners. It is expected that the conditions will be met without hitch, and that the new roadway will be open for traffic within sixty days.

In connection with the resolution authorizing the committee to act, Mayor Smalley made a reply to the remark of former Mayor William L. Saunders, at the Board of Trade meeting Thursday night, to the effect that the only explanation that had presented itself to him as to the absence of permanent pavement from Plainfield was that "men in the stone-crushing business controlled the situation." The mayor's remarks on the subject were as follows:

"Gentlemen, in reference to the resolution introduced by Mr. Waldron, it might be well to discuss same somewhat before passed and voted upon. The subject is in reference to paving Somerset street. The question of testing pavements has been familiar to most communitiies, but is a new one with us outside of macadam. As explained some time ago, I have gone into this matter thoroughly and if the resolution is passed tonight it would be in the shape of paving, as a test, a small section of Somerset street, between Lincoln and Park place, which is one of the busiest sections of our borough, and I hope if the Hassam Pavement proves a success, which I believe it will, to see the balance up to Greenbrook road paved.

"The members of the Plainfield Board of Trade seem to be interested in the question of permanent pavements in one shape or another. I unfortunately did not attend the meeting last night but notice an article by one of our ex-Mayors in which he states that he had often wondered why the streets were not paved with some enduring material, and the only explanation that suggested itself was that men in the stone crushing business controlled the situation: unfortunately I am in that line of business and the reference made strikes at me to some extent, and I am more than surprised that such a remark should come from the source that it did, but I want to say in reference to the remarks made by the member of the Board of Trade, that if his knowledge of permanent pavements is not any better than his knowledge of the local conditions governing the crushed stone business, his opinion on same does not amount to much.

"This fact is true, that North Plainfield is blessed with as good material, if not better, than any city in the State for the making of roads, viz: trap rock, and as to the stone business having delayed the obtaining of so called permanent pavements, that is false. So far as I know the cost of maintaining our streets is about as low as in any place of this size, and the material furnished is of the best. I would further state, that I made the assertion to the Plainfield Board of Trade that I was interested in the Hassam Pavement because it consisted of about three quarters stone, and that is my business. I believe in stating the plain facts of the case.

"I want to say in reference to the resolution, that I believe the pavement mentioned is one of the best made today, did I not think so would not recommend same, in fact think so well of it that I feel like giving my own personal guaranty, if that was any good, that the pavement would stand up for five years, and if it stands that long, it will wear a great while longer, as I have never seen concrete deteriorate any after five years, if it is going to go bad it does so before that time.

"We might discuss this matter of pavements for months or years, and there would still be a doubt as

AUTOMOBILES COLLIDE AT SCOTCH PLAINS

F. A. POPE'S CAR PUTS SPRINGFIELD MACHINE OUT OF COMMISSION.

F. A. Pope's "Thomas Flyer" in charge of a colored chauffeur, was in collision with an automobile from Springfield, at the junction of Front street and Park avenue, Scotch Plains, yesterday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock, and the machine from Springfield was put out of commission.

According to those who saw the accident, the Plainfield machine was running along Park avenue at a lively speed, and the driver failed to slow down as he approached the corner. Coming in the opposite direction was the car from Springfield, under reduced speed, it is said. The two cars met at the corner, but the Springfield man turned his machine to one side, thus avoiding a direct head-on collision. When the mixup was straightened out, it was learned that the Springfield auto was badly crippled. Mr. Pope's machine was able to proceed. There was an exchange of names, with a promise to make proper settlement for damages.

JUSTICE DISMISSES CHARGE AGAINST CONWAY

NO EVIDENCE TO SHOW THAT HE HAD THREATENED MRS. MARY LANE.

The complaint sworn out against Edward Conway, the mule trainer, by Mrs. Mary Lane, under which Conway was arrested yesterday morning, was dismissed by Justice Hezekiah Hand, sitting in the District Court, yesterday afternoon. Conway denied Mrs. Lane's allegation that he threatened to kill her, and no testimony was submitted to corroborate the complaint.

In his testimony Conway declared he gave Miss Adele von Ohl, granddaughter of the complainant, who rides professionally in hippodrome and Wild West shows, money to go to New York and buy two ponies for him. He was staying at the Ohl place, where his mules were in winter quarters, at the time. Miss von Ohl, Conway said, got the ponies, but had the bill of sale made out in her name. When he made arrangements to move his stock, he said; they served an attachment on him and displayed the bill of sale to add snap to the crack of the whip.

Conway is said to be making arrangements to bring suit against Mrs. Ohl. William G. DeMeza is his lawyer.

Trinity Festival Closes.

The strawberry and ice cream festival, under the auspices of the Ladies' Christian Work Society and the Young Women's Mission Band of Trinity Reformed church, closed last night, when everything but the ice cream was sold out. While the attendance was not quite so large as on Thursday night, those attending were liberal in their patronage and materially helped the women of the two societies to swell the profits which will be used for various church purposes. The women worked hard for the success of the affair and that they were well rewarded is a source of gratification.

Plainfielders Going Abroad.

The following Plainfielders have planned to go abroad within the near future: Miss Helen Maher and Miss Mary McMahon, sailing on the Baltic on July 11 for Queenstown; Miss Mary Hines, of West Eighth street, June 15, on the Campania, for Liverpool; Thomas Fay and John Sloyan, June 14, on the Baltic, for Liverpool; Miss Castleman, of Franklin place, June 20, on the Cedric, for Liverpool. All the tickets were procured through Estil's agency.

Somerville, June 8.—Word has been received from Chicago to the effect that Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen's condition is improving. His physician thinks he will be out of danger soon, if no new complications arise. His family here are encouraged over the announcement.

SHOW ATTENDANCE LARGE

New Faces Seen In the Boxes, and Auxiliaries on the Second-Day.

WEATHER DELIGHTFUL

Sunshine and Warmth Cause Tailormades and Wraps to Give Way to Summery Costumes.

With much pleasanter weather prevailing and a large array of horses in the ring society flocked in large numbers to the Riding and Driving Club grounds yesterday afternoon for the second day of the show. The boxes and auxiliaries were all occupied by the time the call for the first class was given, and by 3 o'clock Dame Fashion's edicts were displayed in a brilliant series of costumes. Wraps and "backward spring" gowns were not nearly so noticeable as Thursday and the grounds had the summery appearance that adds so much to the success of an open air show.

Many new faces were in and about the boxes and along the promenade. The following are some of those who apeared in attractive costumes:

Mrs. George A. Beaton—White hair lined black, tailor made; lilac hat, white and purple lilacs.

Mrs. F. H. Andrews—Gray tailor made; black hat, brown lace veil.

Miss Georgianna Smith — White large polka dot silk gown; black hat with feathers.

SOMERSET FREEHOLDERS AFTER AUTOMOBILISTS

WILL KEEP STRICT WATCH FOR CHAIN TIRES ON COUNTY ROADS.

The Somerset County Board of Chosen Freeholders yesterday, at a special meeting, got after the rich colony of Bernardsville people, who will pass over the improved country road from Somerville to Belle Mead today in their huge touring cars on the way to Princeton to attend the baseball game with the Yale team.

The Board authorized Clerk Sutphen to communicate with George Thompson, State Inspector of Automobiles, requesting him to enforce to the limit the State law "respecting the use of chain tires and speed, especially on Saturday, June 8, and particularly on the road from Somerville to Belle Mead."

At the last big game at Princeton hundreds of big cars from Bernardsville, Morristown and other places, where the "smart set" whiles away the time, passed over this thoroughfare at breakneck speed, utterly disregarding the State law, and using chain wheels, much to the detriment of the roads. The Board is determined to stop this disregard for public thoroughfares. Many of the farmers living on the road from Somerville to Belle Mead are afraid to venture on the highway on a day when the "push" is hastening to Tigertown to an athletic contest.

The Somerset Freeholders also had a joint meeting with the Middlesex Board at the Franklin Park Hotel, after going over the road recently macadamized from Franklin Park to New Brunswick. Organization was effected by the election of Mr. Pownall, of New Brunswick, president, and Arthur P. Sutphen, of Somerville, secretary. Mr. Codington was the only member of the Somerset Board absent.

Engineer Doughty, of Somerset, reported in regard to the construction of the road, making a statement of the contract price and payments made, all of this showing that a balance of $1,833.64, which is 5 per cent. of the contract, was still due the builders.

It was decided to accept the road and that each county pay over half the balance.

The road was then divided for the convenience of members of the boards in reference to future repairs. Middlesex assumes the care of 3½ miles of the road, beginning at New Brunswick and Somerset the Franklin Park section of the same length.

"CZAR" LOSES A BLUE

Pet of Hooley Stable Placed Second to "Flirtation"—Lehman Strauss Protests Award In Novice Harness Class.

The high class events scheduled for the second day of the horse show at the Plainfield Riding and Driving Club, attracted a large crowd of society people to the show grounds yesterday afternoon. The weather conditions were an improvement over the first day, the bright sun having a cheery effect on everyone. It was also much warmer and the thoroughbreds worked out much better. What added to the pleasure of the event was the fact that there was not an accident of any kind and all the classes were run off pretty near to scheduled time.

The chief event of the afternoon was the award of "The Official Blue Book" challenge cup, value $250, and a second challenge cup, each followed by reserve ribbons. It was decided by the officials to divide this class, the first to be for horses over 15.2 hands and the second for horses 15.2 hands and under. Reginald Vanderbilt had the satisfaction of carrying off the blue book cup with his beautiful horse, "Dr. Selwonk," taking the honors from Edward Knieriem's bay mare "Kissing." He did not have a chance to compete against the Harriman's stables for J. W. Harriman's "Nala," was put in competition against Miss Emily H. Bedford's "Hildred."

Edward Knieriem received the reserve in the first division, while Miss Bedford captured the blue in the second division and J. W. Harriman received the reserve. Additional interest was lent to this event by the fact that the bona fide owners had to drive. The Harriman stable did not show up as strong in this class as was expected.

Another class that held the close attention of the spectators was No. 27, in which Miss Mabel B. Hooley's chestnut gelding "Czar," the winner of a blue and a championship at the Philadelphia Horse Show, was entered. The entry list was not large, but there was enough rivalry among the few to make up for lack of numbers. H. G. McElwaine's chestnut mare "Flirtation," was a favorite with many, while "Czar," received the applaudits of his admirers every time he passed in review of the grandstands. The judges were fully a half-hour reaching a decision. Harry Peters, one of the judges in this class, rode "Czar" around the ring, while Charles Hurkamp, the second judge, mounted "Flirtation," and noticed every action closely. The third judge, S. Taber Willetts, it was noticed was unwilling to concede the honors to the local horse, and much to the disappointment of the owners' many friends, as well as admirers of the thoroughbred, he failed to get the blue. "Flirtation" was given the first honors, "Czar" second.

Reginald Vanderbilt with his fine entries captured a total of three blues during the afternoon, while the Avondale Farm received only three reds. Another strong competitor was Charles W. McCutchen, who was awarded two reds. Lehman Strauss got one red and one white, and Rufus L. Patterson walked off with two blues. Miss Emily H. Bedford, who has been a dangerous rival in many of the important classes won two blues, one red and one white. Miss Mabel B. Hooley received one blue, one red and one white, while Mrs. Edwin S. Hooley captured two blues. Miss Margaret McCutchen had to be satisfied with one red. Miss Molly C. Maxwell, received one yellow and one white.

William J. Buttfield's bay mare "Miss Banahan" and E. C. Rich's bay mare, "Amanda Baron" were great rivals in Class 3, for the challenge cup offered by Robert A. Fairbairn for roadsters, but "Amanda Baron" won out and received the cup valued at $150. Mr. Buttfield's horse was second and received the reserve ribbon.

All of the local classes were well contested throughout the afternoon and being well arranged with the other classes, in which the out-of-town thoroughbreds figured prominently, it made up a program of great pleasure to all.

There was some surprise occasioned while Class 16, novice harness class, was being judged. Reginald Vanderbilt entered his pair of brown geldings, "Gay Mathias," and "Merry Mathias," but they were shown to the gate quite early. It was said that one of the horses displayed a "wheeze" and the judges would not consider the pair for the honors. H. D. Holloway's pair, "Scotland's Queen," and "Grand Duchess," received first prize in this class.

The award to the Holloway pair was received by a protest from Lehman Strauss on the ground that the horses showed a lameness. The protest will be decided today by the judges. Inasmuch as Mr. Strauss is a dealer his objection was not received favorably by the spectators.

The results of the two days show that Avondale Farm and Miss Emily H. Bedford are tied for the greatest number of awards. Each have received eight, while H. G. McElwaine has captured seven ribbons. Reginald Vanderbilt and J. E. Davis follow with six each, and Mrs. Edwin S. Hooley, Charles W. McCutchen and Rufus L. Patterson each have received five awards. The summary of yesterday's classes folllow:

Class 33—Ponies under saddle—13.3 hands and under. First prize, $25; second prize, $10: First, Miss Mary Pyne's b. m. Chausette; second, Mrs. Thomas J. Ryan's b. g. O'Lee; third, Charles Holloway's b. g. Cardiff; fourth, William Carr's b. g. Yankee.

Class 14—Novice harness class—Pair of horses 14.2 hands and not exceeding 15 hands. First prize, $50; second prize, $15: First, William Carr's ch. g. Applause and ch. g. Encore; second, Charles W. McCutchen's ch. m. All Ablaze and ch. m. Blaze Away.

THE HOUSEHOLD LINEN.

The first thing to consider are towels. Hand towels should be of linen huckaback and are much better bought by the yard and made with a narrow hemstitch hem. The size of the towel when finished should be eighteen by twenty-seven inches. A single half-inch letter should be placed the width of the hem agove it in the centre of the ends.

Large towels of linen huckaback are twenty-four by forty inches, either hemstitched or scalloped at both ends, or one end hemstitched and the other scalloped.

The hems should be two and one-half inches deep, with a single letter three inches high placed three inches from the hem.

Damark towels usually have scalloped ends and are twenty-four by forty inches. A monogram with letters three and a half inches high is placed in the centre about three inches from the hem.

For linen sheets and pillow cases select a heavy round-thread tenquarter sheeting. The hem should be two and a half inches deep. Monograms instead of a single letter should be used and they should be about three inches high and placed two and a half inches above centre of hem.

In table linens a new departure is to have the initials of the host placed directly above his plate or at the left-hand corner, and the initials of the hostess in the corresponding corner. The napkins should match, though the monogram should not be more than half an inch high.

FACTS IN A FEW LINES.

An oak spinning wheel that has been in the Sibley family, West Sutton, Mass., for 150 years is still in perfect condition. All the yarn for the woolen garments worn in the family in three generations was spun on the wheel.

To have all his hair turn gray at the early age of six years with no apparent cause has been the lot of the s on of John Ertwine, of Bloomsburg, Pa. The boy's parents first noticed that his hair was turning about a year ago.

Lewellyn Wilkinson, of Groveport, O., has a cat that is a perfect "pointer and retriever." When he discovers a quail he stands up on his hind legs and remains there until his master comes up. The cat has retrieved 154 birds this season.

The sacred fires of India have not all been extinguished. The most ancient which still exists was consecrated twelve centuries ago, in commemoration of the journey made by the Parsees when they immigrated from Persia to India.

One of the most interesting little charities is that of a Yorkshire (England) station master, who every week of his life makes a toy railway engine. At the end of the year he sends the lot to a hospital for the use of the boys in the institution.

The possibility of life without mind, while not subject to positive proof, is a theory that has gained considerable strength recently through its advocacy by Dr. A. L. Laloy, librarian of the Academy of Sciences, Paris. He believes that many of the smaller living organisms, as insects, are mere moving machines, having no more intelligence than may be ascribed to plants. He refers to the well known fact that insects are attracted by lifht, often to their own destruction, and ascribes it to the same cause that includes the plant to grow toward the light.

Utilities Bill Signed.

Albany, N. Y., June 8.—Governor Hughes signed the Public Utilities bill at ten minutes after eleven o'clock yesterday morning, and the measure is now a law of New York. Governor Hughes made no statement relative to the act, nor did he file any memorandum with the bill, contending himself with the simple signature which put it into the statute book. The new law is one of the most far reaching reform measures ever passed by an American legislature. It places under direct State control every public service corporation, great or small, in the State of New York, with the exception of telephone and telegraph companies. It applies not only to railroads, street railway and subway lines, express companies and gas and electric companies doing business exclusively in the State, but to the business within this State of all railroads or other common carriers which enter the State at any point. Two commissiions created by the act will have most sweeping powers in regulating corporations aected.

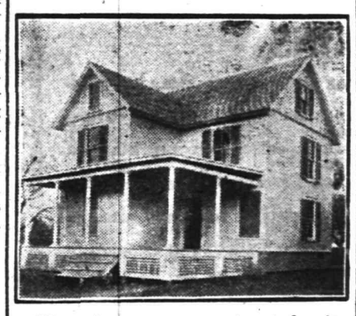
NEW SYSTEM OF BUILDING.

A MARVEL IN THE SCIENCE OF CONSTRUCTION.

A method far in advance of anything formerly used in the preparation of the different parts of a house when erected in sections, making it easy to construct any design of a house, and a very superior house for all seasons, countries and climates at a great reduction in cost.



These houses are constructed principally from the best kiln dried lumber in a factory entirely protected from weather, where best high speed woodworking machines are used for cutting and shaping of every piece, reducing cost for mechanics fully one-half, making a superior house when finished.

Houses or other structures erected under this system make the warmest houses in winter, and the strongest building that can be constructed with any material, the fiercest storm fails to cause any vibration whatever. They are adapted to receive all improvements, plumbing, lighting, heating, etc., when desired.

A new method of lath and plaster is used for interior finish, making a perfect indestructable wall superior to anything ever before used.

What Our Reporter Saw in New York

A recent visit to one of the largest paint factories in the world, disclosed machinery that was producing 10,000 gallons of Paint, and doing it better and in less time than 100 gallons could be made by hand mixing.

This was the celebrated L. & M. Paint.

The L. & M. Zinc hardens L. & M. White Lead and makes L. & M. Paint wear like iron for 10 to 15 years.

4 gallons L. & M. mixed with 3 gallons Linseed Oil makes 7 gallons of paint at a cost of less than $1.20 per gallon.

If any defect exists in L. & M. Paint will repaint house for nothing.

STATE SCHOOL TAX RISE WILL BE INVESTIGATED.

Union's Board of Freeholders Will See If Increase Is Equal In Other Counties.

At the meeting of the Board of Freeholders Thursday afternoon, County Collector Leavitt, County Attorney Codington and the auditing committee, Freeholders Cady, Wilbur and Woodruff were named by Director King to investigate the cause of the increase in school tax to be raised this year by Union county. The resolution providing for the appointment of such a committee was introduced by Freeholder Cady. Last year this county had to raise $98,778.51 as State school tax. This year the amount has jumped to $219,160.09.

The State school tax is based on the value of the ratables in the county in which there was a marked increase under the new law passed last year. The freeholders, however, have an idea that other counties in the State have not increased their ratables in the same proportion as Union has and are going to find out whether, if there had been a proportionate increase all around, the amount to be raised by Union county would still be as large.

A communication was read from Judge Atwater recommending that the report of Mrs. Emily E. Williamson on probation work for the last five years be printed by the county. It was referred to the committee on publication. Judge Atwater enclosed a letter he had written to Mrs. Williamson to the effect that he had read her report with a great deal of interest. He commended the work she has been doing and said he was a great believer in dealing with offenders in the way the probation system provided.

The committee to which had been referred the advisability of purchasing three famous war pictures, the work of Julian Scott, from General J. Madison Drake, reported against doing so. The report said, however, that the pictures would make a most valuable gift to the county, provided some patriotic citizen desired to make a present of them.

New rules of the board, as amended, were adopted as a whole. One of the new provisions prohibits a member from authorizing an expenditure of more than $30 without the approval of the board. The State law allows a member to authorize an expenditure as high as $200. Hitherto the Union board had limited the amount to $50.

The board designated the newspapers in which the official minutes of the board are to be published for the year.

A resolution to pay the employes of the courthouse weekly was adopted.

PETITION TO PLACE DIXON ON SUPREME BENCH.

Hudson County Lawyers Want Him to Succeed the Late Abram Q. Garretson.

Jersey City, June 8.—Petitions are today being drawn in the city and they will be presented, as soon as completed, to lawyers in every county in the State. These petitions have as their object the appointment of Warren Dixon, of Jersey City, son of the late Supreme Court Justice Jonathan Dixon, to fill the vacancy in the Supreme Court, occasioned by the death of the late Supreme Court Justice A. Q. Garretson.

According to the story that is told here today a number of the Supreme Court justices were dining in Trenton after the death of Justice Garretson had been announced. The talk drifted around as to his probable successor. It was conceded that he would have to be a Democrat, and one of the justices proposed the name of Warren Dixon.

"We want a man on the bench," he said, "who knows the Supreme Court and the Court of Errors and Appeals. This man Dixon has had an average of fifteen or twenty cases before the Court of Errors each term for the last three years. That is a larger number of cases than any lawyer in the State has had on the calendar. He argues these cases himself and he knows this court."

The petitions that are being prepared are addressed to Governor Stokes, and as fast as they are signed by a majority of the bars of the State, they will be sent to Trenton. The lawyers also plan to go to Trenton themselves, in groups and alone, and argue Mr. Dixon's appointment. Among these who are said to be behind the move to have him appointed is William D. Edwards, of this city.

According to lawyers in Jersey City, Warren Dixon is conceded to have many of the traits that made his father one of the famous jurists of the State. He is clear headed, they say, and knows the law. For years he has been accredited by those who know him best as being one of the best technical lawyers in the State.

The petitions that will be circulated in Hudson county will probably be in circulation by tomorrow. It will receive the signatures of Jersey City lawyers first and then it will be sent to Bayonne. Last it will go to Hoboken and the northern towns in the county.

WANTS PERMANENT PAVEMENT.

The meeting of the Board of Trade Thursday night, was called more than anything else for the purpose of airing the permanent pavement question and the result was entirely satisfactory from that point of view. The gathering was a large one, composed of property owners and progressive citizens, and they were practically a unit in declaring for an advanced method of paving, brick preferred. The result should prove beneficial to the Common Council as it reveals in concrete form the standing in the matter of the people most concerned. Whether or not the criticisms of the Councilmen for delay in reaching a decision, were warranted, is another proposition, but this representative body will show that it means business by attending the hearing Monday night.

The remarks of former Mayor Willyiam L. Saunders, of the borough, should prove of especial value, as his views are based on the close observation of an experienced engineer. He favored brick in very positive terms and the fact is worthy of more than passing note in any action that is taken.

At any rate, the Board of Trade wants permanent pavement and the organization represents a large part of the city's population.

Your eyes will be examined by THE DAMMERS SCIENTIFIC METHOD. Positively the only absolutely correct way to fit glasses. CONSULTATION FREE.

(NO DROPS USED.) Those who have been examined for GLASSES by men who claim to examine eyes by the old, incorrect way, which is done by everyone who supplies glasses but us, will be agreeably surprised by our scientific and wonderful methods of fitting glasses.

We correct your eye defects by looking in the eyes, taking the exact scientific measurements of the focus and shape of the eyes.

NO QUESTIONS ASKED, no trying glasses on your face, until we have determined your exact optical error.

The old tedious and tiresome way of trying to fit glasses is either putting drops in the eyes, which often causes BLINDNESS, or by trying on a lot of glasses, and asking you "Can you see these letters?" or "Do these glasses make you see better?"

After your Optician does a lot of guessing, and has your eyes all out of shape, you think you have been examined.

Think this over, and you can readily see that you have been doing your own examining, and that is no doubt the reason you have had trouble to get glasses correct.

THIS IS ABSOLUTELY THE HIGHEST CLASS WORK DONE IN FITTING GLASSES IN AMERICA.—
DON'T SUFFER WITH HEADACHE.

We have produced astonishing results from brain fag, nervous debility, insomnia, dizziness, nausea, WATERY EYES, blurry vision, and other troubles caused by EYE STRAIN. We have corrected by the use of glasses cross eyes and Astigmatism by our scientific methods.

Our position in Newark, N. J., and Providence, R. I., as the LEADING OPTICAL EXPERTS is proof of the high confidence in our responsibility, and the reliability of our representations.

David Lowrie.

David Lowrie, aged 61 years, died this morning at his home on Clinton avenue, following a two weeks illness with heart trouble. He was born in Plainfield and resided here all his life. He was a contracting teamster and carried on this business for many years. He was amember of the First Presbyterian church, Dunellen. A wift and three children survive. The children are Clark Lowrie, Robert Lowrie and Mrs. William Apgar, all of this city. The funeral services will be held from the house Tuesday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock, and Rev. HASSAM PAVEMENT TEST to the best. Brick pavement is good, some prefer asphalt, and while a good many talk on this subject that have no knowledge of it, and I may be one of them, still I believe we would be pleased with the Hassam Pavement."

Councilman Van Arsdale spoke briefly in favor of the test. He said that Plainfied seemed to be ready to try brick, and it might be well for the borough to give concrete a test, so that the two kinds would have a trial. The resolution was passed unanimously. Councilman Van Winkle was the only absentee.

Protests from the Board of Health of Dunellen and the Greenbrook Improvement Association against the location of sewer beds on the Abram Vail farm, in the Greenbrook section, were read. Mayor Smalley said that so far as he and the Council was concerned there was no knowledge of where the sewerage commission was to recommend the location of the proposed beds, so there was nothing on which the Council might act with regard to the communications. It was still even an open question as to whether the borough would build its own plant or use the city's. The proper time to consider the protests would be when the commission had made its report. The protests were filed, without comment from the Council.

Recorder Charles M. Dolliver reported 28 arrests and $82.50 collected in fines. "Showing strong improvement in the recorder," said the mayor when the report was read.

The bill of the Consolidation Commission for $100, half of the money to be paid George B. Wean for services as stenographer to the commission, was returned to the councilmanic consolidation committee for reduction. It was felt that the borough ought only to pay a pro rata share of the expense, figured on a basis of population, which would bring down the North Plainfield share of Wean's pay to $50.

The Council adjourned to meet on June 21. There is a possibility that all the formalities attendant on the laying of the concrete pavement will have been gone through by that time.

BOROUGH SCHOOL PUPILS APPEAR IN DRAMATICS

PRESENT "MR. PRATTLETON PRIMROSE" AT THE PARK CLUB.

"Mr. Prattleton Primrose," the comedy given by the members of the Junior and Sophomore classes of the North Plainfield High School in honor of the Seniors, attracted a large number of people to the Park Club, last night, including the parents and friends of the pupils. The performance was a most creditable one throughout and every member of the cast received applause. A special feature was the dancing of the "Minuet" by "Minuetta," and "Cyril Dashwood," and others who are entitled to special mention are Clarence Steiner, as "Jumbo," Miss Agnes Hooley, as "Rose." Mr. Steiner sang a song that won the audience completely. Wilbur Dunning was also very good.

The play was given under the direction of Miss Helen Stahlberger, of the High School faculty, and she deserves great credit for the very saitsfactory results. Following the play an informal dance was held. The cast of characters:

"Cyril Dashwood," a young officer in search of a wife, Eldon Miller; "Mr. Prattleton Primrose," a middle aged bachelor, Wilbur Dunning; "Squire Brushleigh," a country gentleman, George Parsons; "Jumbo," a colored servant who does jus' what I'se tole," Clarence Steiner; laborers, Eldon Miller, Wilbur Dunning, George Hartley; "Rose," Brushleigh's daughter, Miss Agnes Cooley; "Sylvia," a young lady fond of sport, Miss Ida Engelhart; "Minuetta," a young lady fond of dancing, Miss Florence Fowler; "Musidora," a young lady fond of romance, Miss Leonora Miller (Brushleigh's nieces); "Arabela," their friend, a young lady fond of flirtation, Miss Grace Woolston; "Hannah," the cook, Miss Kathleen Peacock.

THE FORUM.

Endless Prayer Chain.

Editor the Daily Press:

My attention has more than once been called to the exceedingly irreverent imposition known as the "Endless Prayer Chain," a practice of writing and forwarding a prayer to be rewritten on nine succeeding days.

The practice appears to be a very common one in Plainfield and vicinity, and my only excuse for intruding upon the matter at all is the fact that a Bishop of the church has been credited with the original composition and sending of this prayer. May I ask sufficient space in your columns to comply with a personal request from Bishop Lawrence that I should make public his denial of any association whatever with this matter.

I beg to quote a statement made by his secretary which covers the case entirely:

"Bishop Lawrence has had nothing whatever to do with the endless prayer chain attributed to him, and he hopes those receiving them will destroy them.

Denials to this effect have been published by the Bishop and others in many papers and the Associated Press has twice published denials.

R. A. HULL, Secretary."

This ought to be sufficient. The method of this peculiar communication whatever may be its origin is shown to be based upon a false statement. It indicates a gross ignorance of scriptural facts, an irreverent spirit and a vulgar tone. As such it deserves only one treatment.

Very truly yours,
E. VICARS STEVENSON,
Rector of Grace Church,

THE WOMAN IN THE CAR

By J. H. LEONHARDT.

(Copyright, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

Bracebridge stood on the steps of the Casino. He had just tempted Fortune, and for once the jade had proved a prude, and he was left with a broken purse. To describe his remorse would be impossible; he wondered dully what his mother would think when he would seek her out that night in their unpretentious hotel that overlooked the bay of Monoca and tell her that the trip would have to be postponed; that they must hasten home without delay. He knew very well what she would do—how she would take his head on her shoulder and lay her soft, faded cheek against his ruddy one and say, "Never mind, boy." He cursed himself for a fool, and then chuckled grimly as he thought of the surplusage of money he would have when he had pawned various articles of apparel, the proceeds of which would go to buy tickets for home.

"Just enough for a box of cigarettes," he muttered as he stumbled down the steps to the street.

"Sir, can you not understand even English," spoke a delicious musical voice. Bracebridge scrambled slowly back to earth from the realms of despair into which he had descended. A big red limousine car stood by the curb, and from its window protruded a vision of pink and gold and fluffiness that caused Bracebridge to uncover with a haste that was more worshipful than graceful.

"Eh! What do you want" he asked, rudely, for his dulled brain was not as quick as it was wont to be, nor his tongue as smooth; but, the next instant he blushed in confusion at his own gruffness. "I beg your pardon, madam; can I be of service to you?"

"Ah, you can," she sighed, relievedly. "Come into the car," and she threw open the door, making room for him beside her.

"But," said Bracebridge, hesitating, "I—"

"Come, if you are going," she spoke impatiently, at the same time rising and grasping his wrist and trying to tug him inside. Bracebridge, though it may sound paradoxical, could not resist that ineffective tug on his arm; he stepped from the curb and dropped on the seat beside her.

"Away, Adolphe!" she cried, sharply. The chauffeur started the machine with a rush.

Bracebridge had a sensation of a swift journey through the night, but it was a dim one, for he was busy drinking in the woman's beauty as she sat beside him, her neck encircled by a pearl collar, an expensive opera cloak thrown over her nude shoulders. Surely he had never seen the equal of this woman for beauty; she seemed almost set aside from him, a goddess; he could not converse with her. Once he tried to speak, but could get no further than "Madam—" whereat he became confused, and stammered himself into silence again. The girl laughed mischievously at his sorry attempt, then looked at him sidewise, out of the corner of her violet-colored eyes, and said lowly: "I am human; you act afraid, as though you might be in the presence of a deity. I would not harm a living creature, and surely not you. Besides, I am smaller than you, you see." She ranged her tiny gloved hand in white kid beside Bracebridge's larger ones.

And then the eternal masculine assumptiveness of soul arose in Bracebridge. He could not tell from whence came his sudden courage, but with a pounce he captured her fingers and threw his muscular arm around her; she struggled hard to release herself, but saw it was useless. She stopped, panting.

"You are mussing my frock; I will call Adolphe, you insolent man," she said, between gasps.

Bracebridge let go her hands and grasped her bare arms, facing her towards him. His eyes were burning; he felt a weakening sensation as he touched her white flesh, a feeling of longing—longing and desire that he could not control. To know that this beautiful creature was at his mercy exhilarated him; he leaned slowly toward her, nearer, and nearer; he could feel her shortened breath on his cheek. He gazed into her eyes, and she blinked, then shut them tightly, murmuring weakly, "Your shining eyes—they blind me." He bent still closer to her, and pressed his lips to hers in one shuddering ecstasy of joy and love. He could have sworn that those two rosebuds returned the pressure of his lips. She gave a surrendering sigh and laid her head upon his shoulder, her arms slipping around his neck. He crushed her to his breast victoriously.

Their one little second passed quickly. The car ran to the curb and stopped with a jerk, and they slipped apart. When the door was opened Bracebridge was saying: "I am clumsy, madam, in arranging your cloak, and I greatly fear your ruffles will be spoiled." He stepped out and looked around; they were back in front of the Casino again.

"I thank you greatly that you will aid me at all, sir," she said, smiling "I abducted you on a wager, sir, that I could carry off the first gentleman I saw at the Casino."

"And may I see you to-morrow?" he asked, his soul in suspense.

"The heart cannot be controlled," she whispered softly. "Drive on, Adolphe." The machine whirred away.

"And now to purchase those cigarettes," said Bracebridge. Something crackled in his coat pocket; he felt, and it was a newspaper.

"How did I get that," he asked himself, opening it absently. The flaming headlines caught his eye:

WOMAN IN RED AUTO ROBS ENGLISH LORD.

Most Daring Scheme in Years—Lord Algernon the Victim.

He put his hand in his change pocket, where reposed his last five-franc note, "a remnant of the last battle."

"The devil; that girl has touched me!" he cried. "I was a fool not to think before what her game was. . . . But thank the gods that I am only a common person; they'll never know what a fool I've been, as they know about the Englishman. I don't believe I will smoke cigarettes to-night," he added, as an afterthought. He pulled out his old briar pipe, lighting it in silence; then he slowly took his way toward the hotel.

"'Tis sad to lose your money and your ideal on one summer's eve," he quoth, very crestfallen.

INDOOR PARTY GAME.

Musical Terms Can Be Made to Give a Pleasant Half-Hour.

In playing this pretty game each guest is given a dainty card, to which is fastened a small pencil by a cord or a ribbon. They are then told that the "music room" is full of articles of interest and that they are to discover them and write down their names.

They may hunt singly or in couples, working their lists out separately or together, as the hostess desires, and the best answer receives a prize, a box of candy in the form of a musical instrument being appropriate.

Their attention is called to the articles about the room, which are numbered, and opposite to corresponding numbers on their cards they must write the names.

Each object numbered must have some musical significance, and one need not be musical to guess them, as certain terms are so common that every one knows them.

Here is a list of articles that might be used in the game, with the significant answer to each:

1. Quire of paper (Choir).
2. Three dolls dressed alike (Triplets).
3. Carpenter's brace (Brace).
4. Watch (Time).
5. Razor (Sharp).
6. Chin-rest of a violin (Rest).
7. Card bearing the letters XL (Forte).
8. Some one's name (Signature).
9. Pair of scales (Scales).
10. Base of a table bell (Bass).
11. Peck measures containing two beets (Two beats in a measure).
12. Heavy string (Chord).
13. Flatiron with the letter B on its face (B flat).
14. Cardboard letter C hung on chandelier (High C).
15. Lump of tar (Pitch).
16. Pipe stem (Stem).
17. Half-tone picture (Half tone).
18. Bank note (Note).
19. Baby's shoe with an O on the sole (Solo).
20. Stout cane (Staff).
21. Necktie (Tie).
22. Bar of soap (Bar).
23. Door key (Key).
24. Tape measure (measure).
25. Quarter dollar with a black court plaster dot on it (A dotted quarter).

MADAME MERRI.

A Lady of Fortune.

For many years the sturdy brown hands of Victorine Ducette had been available whenever an extra pair was needed, and the village housewives had learned to depend mightily on the occasional services of the loyal, hard-working French Canadian. But one day even Victorine failed them, as the doctor's wife discovered when help was needed for the spring cleaning.

"I am ovairwhelm wit' sorry," said Victorine, drawing herself up proudly, "but I mus' riffuse dose job of madame."

"But, Victorine, you always have helped me—and nobody can wash woodwork as beautifully as you can."

"That ees last mont'; eet ees now this mont', madame," returned Victorine, with a comprehensive gesture that relegated her past to the dark ages and likewise called attention to her spotless apron.

"Behol', now I am lady. I 'ave fortune.

"Mon oncle she 'ave proceed to die hon Wisconsin—I ham sole heir of dose oncle.

"Me, I mak no more dose crub hon de floor, dose wash hon de tub, dose polish hon doorknob, dose houseclean hon top som house. Hall day, w'ile dose money last, me, I ham seet hon top ma front windaw, kleed glove hon ma two hand, an' regard wit' pity dose poor worp-peop, w'at go by."

"How much did your uncle leave you, Victorine?"

"Cinquante—feefty dollaire, madame," returned the sole heir, with pride.

"Ah!" returned the doctor's astute wife, hopefully. "Well, perhaps I'd better postpone my spring cleaning until fall."—Youth's Companion.

Jews in Northern India.

High up among the mountain fastnesses of Cashmere, in the extreme north of India, Jews have settled and become the most prosperous of any in the whole peninsula, since they are the main exploiters of the commerce between India and central Asia. They were visited by one Bernier in the year 1650, and the beginnings of their residence probably would lead us back almost to the days of Alexander the Great.

The Mystery of Carney-Croft

By JOSEPH BROWN COOKE. COPYRIGHT 1907 BY STORY-PRESS CORPORATION

My impassioned words had no effect upon her other than to make her weep piteously, and I waited until she had regained her composure somewhat and was able to talk coherently.

"You misjudge me, Mr. Ware," she said. "Indeed you do, sir. I have committed no crime, sir, and I am doing all in my power to prevent one; for it would be a crime if it happened, although the law wouldn't call it so, sir."

She laid her hand on my shoulder respectfully and then, the old-fashioned, motherly way coming over her, she continued in a choking voice:

"You must do as I ask, Mr. Ware. Do not distrust me, I beg of you, sir, for I have so much to bear and I have borne it all so patiently and so willingly, too, sir. Remember, I have no fault to find, and I am glad to have been able to do what I have done, sir, but the end is so near now that I cannot bear to have everything go for nothing at the last."

Her eyes were filled with tears, and, do what I might, I could not doubt her honesty and sincerity. Before I could speak, she went on hurriedly, looking about her in an apprehensive way:

"Just believe in me for a few days, sir, won't you? Do this for your own sake and for Miss Carney's and the other young lady's. You will never regret it, sir, I promise you; I swear it, sir, on everything I hold sacred, and God knows I am a churchwoman and live in fear of Him and His love sir."

For my life I could do no more than she asked, and, after a moment's hesitation, I said slowly:

"I must trust you, Mrs. Bruce, but I must tell you that I do so against my best judgment. I do not see how all these things can be explained satisfactorily and they must be explained soon in every way. Still, I believe that you are sincere in what you tell me, and, for the present at least, I will ask no more questions and rely upon you to fulfill your protestations of good faith when the proper time comes. You will understand, of course, that in spite of this promise I shall feel perfectly free at any time to take such steps in this matter as I may deem necessary, and, while I am willing to let things stand as they are now for a short time, I shall act promptly and effectively if any new or otherwise suspicious circumstances arise."

With these words I turned and walked down the path in the direction of Carney-Croft, leaving her standing by the gate, crying softly.

The next afternoon I took a boat on the river and paddled aimlessly up and down trying to kill time and watching for an opportunity to speak to Miss Carney, whom I had not seen for two days. Miss Weston's condition was growing steadily worse, and the arrival of the nurses from town and their close attention to their patient, coupled with the frequent and anxious visits of the village physician, served as a sufficient excuse for the hurried departure of all of Miss Carney's guests except myself, who remained from a sense of duty as well as a desire to be near at hand and in a position to set myself right with my hostess on the first occasion that offered.

I did not go far from the house, but rowed up and down the stream with no particular objective point in mind and only thinking of what I might do in regard to Mrs. Bruce, and, most of all, how I could hope to again gain Miss Carney's good will, if nothing more, and explain, in the slightest degree, my outrageous behavior.

It is needless to say that I was in no happy frame of mind and, as I allowed the boat to drift slowly down stream with the current, I leaned over the side and peered into the depths of the limpid water on which I was floating.

As I drifted carelessly along in this lazy fashion I finally came to a point opposite that portion of the bank where the ghosts had disappeared so suddenly and mysteriously in the bright moonlight. Up to this time my mind had been free from any thought of this feature of the Carney-Croft puzzle, for the events of the past few days, together with my anxiety to see Miss Carney and right myself in her eyes, were more than enough to occupy my entire attention for the moment.

The realization of my position off the shore, however, served to recall vividly the spectral scene of the summer, and I again began to speculate as to the manner in which the ghost-like figures had managed to disappear from view in such an effectively supernatural way.

While I was pondering over this problem and wondering if I was ever to solve it with any degree of satisfaction, I noticed a slight commotion in the water between me and the shore, such as might have been made by a beaver or a muskrat.

In another moment a man's head appeared above the surface and then, with a wild look at me and my boat, not 20 yards distant, he gave a convulsive sputter and disappeared again with a plunge like that of a porpoise playing under the bow of a ship.

The water was bitterly cold, for it was now near the end of October, and there was a chill in the air which foretold the coming of snow, yet, although I patrolled the spot for nearly half an hour and had a clear view of the river and shore for fully a mile in every direction, the figure did not reappear.

CHAPTER XXII.

An Unexpected Swim.

For a time it seemed to me that the fellow's life must have been lost and that his body had floated down the stream with the current, which increased steadily in force as it neared the falls, some two miles below.

Whence he had come I did not know, for I could not conceive that a man would be swimming in the river at this time of year, and, just as I was about to row ashore and report the affair to those who could institute a proper search for the body, an idea flashed into my head and served to explain the matter in short order.

The ghosts, or at least the men who impersonated them, had always disappeared from sight at this point on the river bank, and, doubtless, they had dived into the water and found shelter somewhere under the shore. If this were the case, a man might easily enough have ventured out from his hiding place, and, upon seeing me, returned and waited until the coast was clear again.

I pulled in close to the shore, and, paddling slowly along under the overhanging bank, I soon discovered a broad flight of stone steps lying entirely beneath the surface of the water, and leading apparently to some sort of a tunnel or cave.

As I made this discovery I had no doubt that the mysterious figure I had seen had emerged from this sunken tunnel, and, upon encountering me, had returned to it with all possible haste. I certainly had no desire to follow him through the submerged entrance to his place of concealment, but I determined to oust him without delay, and leaving my skiff at the boathouse, I returned for a final reconnoiter before summoning a gang of men to dig down from above and lay bare the subterranean vault to which the submerged stairway doubtless led.

Clambering up on the knoll that overlooked this part of the river, I cast my eye in every direction up and down the stream, keeping as close a watch as possible on the entire landscape, and, even sooner than I had expected, I was rewarded by seeing the fellow's head again emerge from the water about 20 feet off shore.

As he shook the drops from his face and glanced about him apprehensively I crouched low down on the ground, back of a brush, and watched him attentively from this point of vantage. His countenance was so distorted with the cold and the water in his eyes that I could not have recognized him even if I had seen him before, and he seemed to swim with great difficulty, doubtless because of the icy chill of the water; but he went bravely about it and struck out manfully for the shore, which he reached in a few sturdy strokes.

As he got into shallow water and made his way to the land, I could see that he was fully dressed, even to his shoes, and that he was shivering violently from the effect of his exertion and the exposure to which he had been subjected.

I was almost on the point of calling out to him and offering him such assistance as I could render lest he should collapse before my eyes, when I discovered that he, himself, had made provision for this contingency.

From under a growth of underbrush he hurriedly extracted a heavy ulster or storm coat, and, taking a flask from one of the pockets, he raised it to his lips and drank long and greedily. This done, he drew the coat nervously about his shaking limbs, and, with a hunted sort of a look in every direction but mine, so that I did not get a view of his face, he ran at top speed along the shore and finally disappeared in the trees at the turn of the river.

It would have been futile to have followed him, and I once more began to look about me before calling for aid and having the cavern, or whatever it was, unroofed. The lawn at this part of the grounds was kept in especially good condition, as it lay almost directly in front of the house, and scattered about it were numerous flower beds and clumps of shrubbery.

In going over this area carefully and systematically as I did, I was not long in finding in the center of a mass of thickly leaved evergreen bushes, a patch of earth that had evidently been disturbed within a few hours. On brushing away the leaves and dirt, which seemed to have been replaced hurriedly, in an awkward attempt to conceal the spot, I came upon an iron grating like the covering to the manhole of a sewer, but with openings which, if they had been clear, would have permitted a certain limited amount of ventilation. This lid was hinged at one side but was not fastened down and I had no great difficulty in lifting it up so that I could peer into the blackness below.

An iron ladder, very much rusted and weather worn, but apparently perfectly strong and secure, was attached to one side of this shaft, and, after waiting for a few minutes until my eyes had become accustomed to the blackness of the hole [illegible] that it was about [illegible] into the arched [illegible] some kind, the floor of which, as well as the sides and top, was constructed of massive masonry.

At times the most level-headed and evenly balanced man is tempted to do some foolhardy thing, and, while I make no claim to any unusual degree of personal bravery, and have not a dare-devil trait in my disposition, I was suddenly seized with an irresistible desire to descend into this forbidding looking pit and investigate it for myself, then and there.

My revolver was fully loaded and I also carried a small pocket-lamp which had been given me some time before and which I had found useful on several occasions; less strenuous, however, than the one at hand.

With these thoughts in my mind and, it must be confessed, with many misgivings which I strove to keep down and ignore, I propped open the lid of the manhole and descended boldly into the underground passage, holding my revolver firmly in my hand and ready to light my little lamp as soon as I reached the bottom of the ladder.

Once in the tunnel I stepped to one side in the direction of the river, where I could not be seen by anyone looking in from above, and tried to accommodate my eyes to the darkness of the place and avoid, if possible, the use of my lamp.

After a time I found that I could see fairly well and that I was in a long, narrow tunnel of brick and stone, about six feet wide and seven in height, which sloped gradually down to the river, where it ended in the flight of stone steps that I had seen and which were entirely under the surface of the water. There was a damp, noisome odor to the place and I soon recognized in it the same graveyard smell that I now knew so well and dreaded so much.

I had, however, expected something of this sort, and nerving myself to almost anything that might be disclosed in my search, I proceeded cautiously and stealthily along toward the steps, thinking I would explore that part of the tunnel first, before going in the other direction.

I saw nothing of interest until I got near the water, where I found a heavy, warm coat neatly folded and, on it, a whisky flask with the cork loosened, evidently awaiting their owner and indicating clearly that he purposed returning by the route he had taken when he left.

I saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised, and as it was a case of 'any port in a storm,' I got a supply of this medicine at Randolph's pharmacy and before I had taken two boxes of it I found that my kidneys were acting stronger and better and the pains were leaving me. NEW LAW INVOKED REGARDING COUNTY JURORS.

None to Be Selected For Remainder of the May Term—Union First to Act.

The following order was issued yesterday morning by Judge Atwater and posted in the court room at Elizabeth:

"The Court of Common Pleas of Union county, being satisfied that the business of the several courts in said county does not require a new panel of jurors to be selected for the remainder of the present May term, it is on this 5th day of June, 1907, ordered by the court that the Sheriff of Union county refrain from selecting or summoning other or further jurors to serve during such term. And it is further ordered that the existing panel of jurors shall continue to serve during the term so long as the business of the courts of the county may require.

"By order of the court,

"EDWARD S. ATWATER,
"Judge."

The order was made under an act passed by the last Legislature and recently signed by the Governor, which makes it the duty of the Sheriff, on the second Monday of each regular term of any Circuit Court, Court of Oyer and Teminer, Common Pleas or Quarter Sessions, and on every alternate Monday thereafter during the term, to select a new general panel to serve as jurors in the trial of causes before these courts from the Monday following their selection for a period of two weeks. This provision applies to counties of more than 100,000 inhabitants. The judge is also empowered, if he sees proper, to discharge the panel summoned when it appears before him, and is further empowered to strike out or add to the names previously selected.

The act, however, leaves it to the court to decide whether the business is sufficient to warrant the drawing of new jurors. When the judge decides that a new panel is not necessary it means the saving of considerable money to the county. Union county is said to be the first to take advantage of the new law.

Took Half Cake Soap.

New York, June 8.—Charles E. Jeffreys, superintendent of the United States Express Company's building, at Rector street and Trinity place, caused the arrest of Mrs. Anna Powlsky, a scrub woman, charging that she had stolen a half used cake of soap, valued at two or three cents. "Don't you think that's a pretty trivial charge on which to cause an arrest?" aMgistrate Moss asked Mr. Jeffreys. Mr. Jeffreys replied that for the last few months many petty thefts had taken place in the building and he was compelled to make an example of somebody. Mrs. Powlsky admitted that she had taken the soap to wash her hands. Morris Engel, a banker, of No. 9 Albany street, who did not know the woman, went bail for her.

HORSE SHOW ENDS WITH HARRIMAN IN THE LEAD

Owner of Avondale Farm Carried off a Total of Seventeen Ribbons and Lawson Cup.

VANDERBILT SECOND

Attendance on the Closing Day Breaks Previous Records—Many Fine Classes in the Final Program.

The fourth annual exhibition of the Plainfield Riding and Driving Club ended Saturday afternoon in a "blaze of glory," not only for the exhibitors, but as a gathering of hundreds of well known society people throughout the Metropolitan district. The attendance was by far the largest of any previous day, and attention was about evenly divided between the handsomely gowned women who thronged the grandstand and private boxes, and the thoroughbreds which stepped their prettiest in the ring.

Society was there in its brightest and best, and the favorite horses were applauded to the echo by their fond admirers. Seldom has there been such a gathering of well known personages to lend their stamp of approval to Plainfield's greatest show. It was the unanimous opinion that the exhibition was the best ever held and nothing but praise was spoken of the club for the way in which the affair was planend.

There were two or three events that outshone the others on the last day's program. There was the competition for the Thomas W. Lawson challenge cup, valued at $150, with a reserve ribbon, and the champion saddle class. It was a disappointment to the spectators that there were not more entries for the Lawson cup. The Avondale Farm's horses had the field to themselves, Reginald Vanderbilt failing to bring his entries to the ring, because they were not in condition. Miss Emily H. Bedford also failed to show in this class. J. W. Harriman in consequence had no trouble in winning the cup, his pair, "Lord Burleigh" and "Lord Brook," carrying off the blue, and his second entry, "Laughing Water" and "Chieftain," driven by his young son, received the reserve ribbon. This cup must be won

JUSTICE RAIDS SYLVAN RESORT OF GAMESTERS

PUTS FIFTY GAMBLERS TO FLIGHT, AND BURNS APARATUS.

Assisted by a posse of four, of which the Mayor of Dunellen and a Dunellen councilman were members, Justice R. P. F. Von Minden, of New Market and the Marsh building, who is borough counsel of Dunellen, dispersed of a gang of petty gamblers in Piscataway township yesterday afternoon. The dispersal was followed by a smashing and burning bee.

The gang against which the energetic justice proceeded had been gathering persistently, every Sunday, in a little thicket in the township, near the Dunellen line. They were just far enough over the line to make it impossible for Marshal Owen Mohan, of Dunellen, who knew of their meetings, to raid them. Mohan told Justice Von Minden, and yesterday the latter determined to act. With Mayor Wyckoff and Councilman Charles Starker, of Dunellen, and a New York friend of the councilman's, who didn't believe there could be a successful raid without the help from District Attorney Jerome, he worked silently up to the edge of the thicket, where a good view of the gang could be obtained. Fully fifty men and youths, a number of them from this city both colored and white, were shooting craps and playing cards. There were two large tables, one, especially built for crap games, resting on three wooden horses.

The justice and his party broke in on the gang suddenly, and a great scramble followed. The gang fled in all directions, leaving dice, cards and all other apparatus behind. The raiders were not after prisoners, so no attempt to arrest was made.

The tables were smashed, and a bonfire was kindled in which they were consumed. Cards, dice and money were kept for evidence. If the gang returns next Sunday, Justice Von Minden will head a posse of twenty-five citizens and raid the open-air resort to capture all the players.

Why Frank Smiles.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank McCabe, of East Fourth street, are the parents of twins, a boy and a girl, who came to their home Friday night. Mother and babies are doing nicely.

Miss Helen Farland, of East Front street, has returned from a visit with friends in Jersey City.

Mr. and Mrs. David G. Weems, of Belvidere avenue, will sail Saturday for Europe for a pleasure trip.

NOTED PHILANTHROPIST

Had Devoted Much of His Time to the Advancement of Education and Uplifting of the Poor.

David Prescott Hall, one of the best known residents of Plainfield, died suddenly of heart trouble at his home on Madison avenue, Saturday night. Although he had not been in good health for some time, he went to business in New York every day, and was at his office as usual on Saturday.

Mr. Hall was born in New York November 15, 1845, and was the son of David Priestley and Caroline Minturn Hall. He spent the early part of his life in New York and at the age of sixteen years went into the law office of his father, to prepare himself for the profession of law practice. His father was one of the prominent lawyers in New York, and with his asstance was able to secure admission to the New York Bar at the age of twenty-three years. He was also a charter member of the New York Bar Association.

He was married in 1871 to Miss Marion Howe, daughter of Dr. Samuel Gridley Howe, an eminent philanthropist and friend of the blind and poor, and Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, the author of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," and well known throughout the world for her literary achievements and work in behalf of woman suffrage.

Mr. Hall's father, as well as his uncle, Jonathan P. Hall, were for years prominent in legal circles and Mr. Hall was a descendant of the Buckley's from which Ralph Waldo Emerson was also a descendant. Mr. Hall and his family moved to Scotch Plains about thirty years ago, and from the first he took a lively interest in the affairs of that place.

It was largely through his efforts that the town became Republican in politics, and he was also the nominee of his party for the Assembly, but through coalition he was defeated. For many years he was a member of the Board of School Trustees and it was as a result of his perseverance that the new school was built at Scotch Plains at a cost of $14,000. McKim, Mead & White were the architects. He then turned his attention to establishing a public library at Scotch Plains. This was accomplished with the aid of Miss Mary Mead. Mr. Hall secured the passage of a State law allowing the residents of that town to start a library with a fund of $1,000. He was also president of Excelsior Hook and Ladder Company, of Scotch Plains, and helped that company to build a home for itself. It was in this building that the first library was started, and later moved to more pretentious quarters. Although a Presbyterian, Mr. Hall identified himself with the work at All Saints' Episcopal church at Scotch Plains, and at one time was a vestryman. He was also overseer-of-the- poor at the yearly salary of $4. He took the office to help the poor.

Mr. Hall was for many years a member of the Board of State Charities and after moving to Plainfield fourteen years ago, he became active in local affairs. He was an officer in the Organized Aid Association and an honorary member of the Monday Afternoon Club, before which he has given two addresses on the Constitution of the United States and parliamentary law.

He was a great help to Mrs. Hall in her work, and although not a pronounced suffragist, he was in sympathy with the movement. He was a man of exceptional qualities and ability.

Mr. Hall is survived by his wife, three sons and one daughter. The last named is Miss Caroline Minturn Hall, the artist, who lives at home. The sons are Samuel Prescott Hall, an architect, who resides in Philadelphia; Henry Marion Hall, a teacher at Carteret School, Orange, and John Howe Hall, a mining engineer, associated with the Taylor Iron and Steel Company, of High Bridge.

The funeral services will be held from the late home tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, and Rev. Hugh Birckhead, rector of St. George's Episcopal church, New York, a cousin of Mr. Hall, will officiate. The interment will be in Mount Auburn Cemetery, Boston.

Hopes Changes His Plea.

When the case of Charles Hopes, colored, was called in the Union County Court, this morning, his counsel, S. S. Swackhamer, changed the former plea of not guilty to that of non vult, and he will be sentenced on June 26. Hopes was indicted on two counts, abuse and assault with intent, the victim being Martha Mead, a three-year-old white girl.

OBSERVE CHILDREN'S DAY

Evangelical Churches Hold Services of a Special Nature.

ATTRACTIVE EXERCISES

Little Ones Sing Pretty Songs and Recite—Number of Baptisms—Churches Decorated with Flowers and Plants.

In most of the evangelical churches yesterday, the annual observance of Children's Day was held. Elaborate and pretty exercises were presented. The fine weather helped the interesting programs to draw large congregations. They were as follows:

Congregational Church.

partment to the main school took prominent part in the exercises at the Congregational church. The exercises were held in conjunction with the church service, at 10.30 o'clock. The pupils occupied the front middle pews. The platform was prettily decorated.

These children graduated into the main school: Elizabeth E. Martin, Edna Mundy, Florence Liesen, Mildred Poole, Helen Weseman, Holmes Clawson, Roy M. Wyckoff. They took part in an interesting exercise. Each received a diploma and a testament.

Three children were baptized by the pastor, Rev. Charles E. Goodrich. They were Roselyn Beatrice and Charles Herbert, daughter and son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Listman; and Alice Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Suffern.

Bibles were presented to children who had been baptized in the church and attained the age of seven. Russell Tomlinson and Ruth Fuller received them.

The pastor gave an object talk to the smaller boys and girls. His subject was the cedar tree, and he had a small tree on his desk with which to illustrate it. He drew several forceful lessons from the tree.

A short Sunday school session followed the service. Superintendent John M. Whiton was in charge.

MR. SAUNDERS REPLIES

Regrets Mayor Smalley Did Not Hear His Remarks at Board of Trade Meeting.

REGARDING PAVEMENT

Asserts That Borough Council's voting for Concrete is Further Proof That Executive Controls the Situation.

In connection with Mayor Smalley's remarks on the permanent pavement question at the Borough Council meeting, Friday night, a Daily Press reporter interviewed former Mayor William L. Saunders, this morning. Mayor Smalley's talk related for the most part to a reply to a statement made by Mr. Saunders at the last Board of Trade meeting in which he said the only explanation he had of the City Council holding up the brick pavement ordinance was "that men in the stone-crushing business controlled the situation." Alluding to the borough executive's reply, Mr. Saunders said today:

"I have but one regret in connection with my talk on permanent pavement before the Board of Trade last week and tht is that Mayor Smalley was not present. I feel sure that his sense of humor would have saved him from his explosive speech at the Borough Council meeting. There is a saying:

"'Many a shaft at random sent Finds mark the archer little meant.'

"To which I would add:

"'Many a word at random spoken
May fire the blast—and stone is broken.'

"The action of the Borough Council to lay a concrete pavement 'on trial' without a thorough investigation, and without a report from engineers or other competent and disinterested persons is only further evidence of the fact that the Mayor controls the situation. He says, if correctly reported in the papers, that he is interested in concrete pavement' because 'it consisted of about three-quarters stone, and that is my business.' This frankness is characteristic of the Mayor and I admire him for it; but were I a juryman and he a witness I should take his testimany on the subject of pavement with many grains of salt. I, too, am not an impartial witness because I supply machinery to stone quarries and have no interest directly or indirectly in brick. The question is simply what is best for the streets of the city and borough and an impartial investigation on this point, will, I feel sure, favor vitrified brick, laid on edge, not flat as on Watchung avenue. Why try experiments when other cities have tried them for us? Why run the chance of litigation resulting from somebody's guarantee?

"I am in accord with all that Mayor Smalley says about our being 'blessed with as good material as any city in the State for the making of roads,' but Front street and Park avenue and North avenue and Somerset street are not roads but busy streets which should be permanently paved, regardless of the 'blessed' stone in our green hills and with the single purpose in view to use that pavement which during the past twenty years has proved that it is best for a town like ours."

GAVE LUNCHEON FOR THREE ENGAGED COUSINS.

Mrs. Samuel Rushmore, Hostess of Eight Guests at an Unusual Affair.

In honor of her three cousins, whose engagements have recently been announced, Mrs. Samuel W. Rushmore, of Putnam avenue, gave a charming luncheon at the Plainfield Country Club, Saturday afternoon. Those for whom the luncheon was given are Miss Alice Rushmore, of Park avenue, fiancee of Henry Wells, of the borough; Miss Marion Taber, of Brooklyn, fiancee of William Adams, of Boston, and Miss Lillian Fancher, of Fanwood, fiancee of Edward Howe, of Troy, N. Y.

There were eight guests and the dining room was prettily decorated with roses and ferns. The social features during and following the luncheon were delightful and the young women for whom the luncheon was given were showered with congratulations. No dates have been set for the different weddings, but it is expected that they will take place in the fall.

Advanced Vaudeville Tonight.

Manager Counihan's "advanced vaudeville" begins at the New Plainfield theatre tonight. No performance will be given tomorrow night on account of "The Peasant Prince," otherwise the show will run all week. It is the best program of vaudeville talent that has ever been brought to the city.

MISS EDITH CAIRNS A CHARMING BRIDE

PRETTY HOME WEDDING, AT WHICH GEN. O. O. HOWARD WAS A GUEST.

A most interesting and attractive wedding took place at the home of Mrs. Hannah Cairns, 444 West Fifth street, Saturday afternoon, at 4 o'clock, when her daughter, Miss Edith Cairns, was joined in marriage to Lucius I. Wightman. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. G. W. Nicholson, pastor of the First Baptist church, of Bridgeport, Conn., former pastor of the bride at Jersey City. The beautiful service of the Episcopal church was used.

Irving Cairns, of Montclair, uncle of the bride, gave her away. Miss Josephine Holloway, of Montclair, was maid of honor. The best man was George S. Gildersleeve, of Detroit, Mich., a classmate of the groom. Two little ribbon-bearers, Miss Esther Merrick and Master Richard Howard, preceded the bridal party as they entered the beautifully decorated parlors, while Miss Christine Tracy, of New York city, sang the Bridal Chorus from Lohengrin, accompanied by Mrs. Lawrence R. Howard.

The bride was charmingly gowned in a white lace robe and a tulle veil, fastened with a spray of swansonia, and she carried a shower bouquet of the same blossoms. A beautiful opal and diamond pendant, the gift of the groom, was the only jewel she wore. The maid of honor wore white mull with lace trimmings and a flower hat, and carried a bouquet of pink swansonia. Miss Tracy wore white and carried white flowers.

At the reception immediately following the ceremony, the guests were received by Mrs. Cairns, mother of the bride, Judge and Mrs. R. H. Gilmore, of Denver, Colo., the latter a sister of the bridegroom, and Judge Gilmore's half brother, General O. O. Howard, of Burlington, Vt.

Among the relatives from out of town were Mr. and Mrs. Irving Cairns, Clifford Cairns, Edward Cairns and Irving Cairns, Jr., of Montclair; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Cairns and Charles Cairns, of Hackensack; Mrs. Jasper Cairns, Mr. and Mrs. Shepard Rowland, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Rowland and Miss Carrie Cooper, of Montclair; William Cairns, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. James W. Howard, of Newark; also Dr. and Mrs. Edwin W. Rice, of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Brown, of Montclair; Miss Martha Murray Foster, of Mt. Vernon, N. Y.

In addition to a beautiful display of silver, cut glass and china, there was received as a wedding gift from a friend of the groom a fine blooded horse. Miss Cairns has long been a prominent Sunday-school worker, not only in the First Baptist church, but also in the State and county Sunday-school Unions. The scholars of the Sunday-school gave the bride a set of candlesticks, and the gift of the teachers was a 365 day clock.

Mr. Wightman is a graduate of the University of Colorado and at present is employed as the superintendent of the Ingersoll-Rand Drill Company's Publication Department. Several valuable gifts were received from the groom's business associates. W. L. Saunders, president of the company, was among the wedding guests.

PLAINFIELDER BROUGHT INTO THE STATE PROBE

Attempt Made to Show that George J. Tobin Was Favored in the Plumbing Contracts.

BUILDER TESTIFIES

Denied That $12,000 Extra Paid to Tobin on Prison Wing Job Was "Graft" or "Rake-off."

The Hahn investigating committee, which is probing the management of State affairs under Republican administrations, delved into contracts on State building work Saturday and as a result the name of George J. Tobin, of this city, was brought into the proceedings in prominent form.

Lewis Lawton & Son, of Trenton, have in the past seven years done the bulk of the State's building and the contracts for plumbing and heating have always gone to Tobin, notwithstanding the fact that in one instance F. S. Katzenbach & Co., of Trenton, bid $12,000 less than Tobin. The entire time of the committee was devoted to efforts in establishing that some contractors were geting inside information on State work, that plans were so arranged that some bidders were forced to put their prices up so far that they never got any State work while favored ones were tipped off to work in the specifications which they would not have to perform, and later the work and pay came to them in the form of extras.

Contractor Lawton was placed on the stand Saturday and after going over many building matters in detail, the probers got down to the plumbing and heating end. It was shown that Tobin had been plumber for Lawton on all jobs he has done for the State, but counsel could not bring from the witness that Tobin was recognized as the "State plumber."

Mr. Lawton testified that Katzenbach & Co., of Trenton, were $12,000 lower than Tobin on the plumbing and heating in the new prison wing, and when asked if it was not a fact that Katzenbach & Co. did not get the work because "the powers that be would not let them do the work," witness replied, "No."

He said he gave work to Tobin because he had asked Tobin for a bid and had not asked Katzenbach for a similar bid. He further declared that he had another bid lower than Tobin's.

"Then on an $82,000 contract you were able to cast aside $12,000," remarked Mr. Backes. "What were your profits then?"

"That's for me to say," replied witness.

Lawton further testified that Tobin's bid was about $23,000 and that "every job he got was on its merits, and I gave the work to Tobin on merit, irrespective of his being the lowest bidder."

Asked how he got these jobs and was enabled to deal so handsomely with others, and if it was not because he got inside information, witness said: "No inside information."

It was brought out that Mr. Lawton's State House contracts amounted to $275,203 and that he had been paid $69,932 in "extras." No other contractor has done any work about the State House except Mr. Lawton in the past seven years and Tobin has had all of Lawton's subcontracts for plumbing.

Asked if Mr. Tobin was not a poor man a few years ago, struggling for business in Plainfield, and was now a very wealthy and substantial citizen, Mr. Lawton said that "Mr. Tobin was pretty well-to-do when I first met him."

"How do you reconcile your refusal of Katzenbach's bid with your duty to your family?" asked counsel, and witness answered: "It does sound unreasonable; doesn't it?"

"Don't you think that $12,000 paid to Tobin was nothing but graft, a rake-off?" asked counsel.

"No," was the answer, "I do not think it anything of the kind. It was just a pure matter of business. That was the only job on which Tobin has been high."

"You know that the $12,000 was not used by Tobin for George Tobin, do you not?"

"Yes, I will say it was."

"Will your books show all moneys received from the State?"

"Yes.'

"Will you bring those books here next Tuesday?"

"Yes."

Mr. Lawton was then excused.

After hearing several other witnesses, the committee adjourned until tomorrow morning.

EYESIGHT SPECIALIST

ONE DAY ONLY

Parlors of Kensington Hotel, Plainfield.

Wednesday, June 12.

HOURS—9.00 a. m. until 4.00 p. m.

Your eyes will be examined by THE DAMMERS SCIENTIFIC METHOD. Positively the only absolutely correct way to fit glasses. CONSULTATION FREE.

(NO DROPS USED.) Those who have been examined for GLASSES by men who claim to examine eyes by the old, incorrect way, which is done by everyone who supplies glasses but us, will be agreeably surprised by our scientific and wonderful methods of fitting glasses.

We correct your eye defects by looking in the eyes, taking the exact scientific measurements of the focus and shape of the eyes.

NO QUESTIONS ASKED, no trying glasses on your face, until we have determined your exact optical error.

The old tedious, and tiresome way of trying to fit glasses is either putting drops in the eyes, which often causes BLINDNESS, or by trying on a lot of glasses, and asking you "Can you see these letters?" or "Do these glasses make you see better?"

After your Optician does a lot of guessing, and has your eyes all out of shape, you think you have been examined.

Think this over, and you can readily see that you have been doing your own examining, and that is no doubt the reason you have had trouble to get glasses correct.

THIS IS ABSOLUTELY THE HIGHEST CLASS WORK DONE IN FITTING GLASSES IN AMERICA—DON'T SUFFER WITH HEADACHE.

We have produced astonishing results from brain fag, nervous debility, insomnia, dizziness, nausea, WATERY EYES, blurry vision, and other troubles caused by EYE STRAIN. We have corrected by the use of glasses cross eyes and Astigmatism by our scientific methods.

Our position in Newark, N. J., and Providence, R. I., as the LEADING OPTICAL EXPERTS is proof of the high confidence in our responsibility, and the reliability of our representations.

LIQUOR LICENSES HELD UP.

Elizabeth Excise Board Wants Opinion on Screens.

Elizabeth, June 10.—That the Grand Jury has thrown a scare into the Board of Excise was apparent at the last meeting when the board refused to act on applications for renewals of licenses from nineteen place conducted as ins and taverns. The board decided that it must have a report on the equipment of these places from the license inspector before taking action.

An opinion received from City Attorney Connolly was partly responsible for this move by the excise commissioners. The opinion set forth that because a place was designated as in and tavern it did not have the right to maintain screens on Sundays unless it also had ten spare rooms as reuired by the Bishops' act. The fact that a place was an inn and tavern under the general law, which requires only two spare rooms, does not allow it to keep screens in the windows on the days prohibited by law, the city attorney said.

"I would state in conclusion," the opinion said, "that it is the duty of your board to grant license for inns and taverns to those only who comply with the inns and tavern act, and it might be made a part of the duties of the license inspector to report to your board in all cases whether applicants for such licenses are properly provided to carry on business in accordance with the provisions of the stature.

STOLE WOMAN'S MONEY.

Officials in a Mix-up Getting Prisoner to Jail.

Edward Linke, of Bound Brook, was lodged in jail at New Brunswick Saturday morning, charged with attacking a oman, named Lizzie Wells in Piscataway township and taking her pocketbook, in which was $4.25.

Mrs. Wells complained to the Bound Brook authorities and Linke was arrested and taken before Justice La Rue. In the hearing it developed that the attack had been made just out of Bound Brook, a few feet over the Middlesex county line, in Piscataway township. The case consequently could not be handled in Bound Brook, which is in Somerset county.

The justice accordingly sent Linke to the Middlesex county jail in custody of an officer, with an unsigned warrant. The justice arranged to go to New Brunswick today and see Justice Sedam and have the matter fixed up so that Linke could be properly committed in Middlesex county.

RICH WIDOW WEDS.

Mrs. Breidt, of Elizabeth, Married to Wealthy Brewer.

Elizabeth, June 10.—Mrs. Louise Breidt, the rich widow of Peter Breidt, founder of the Peter Breidt Brewery, was married at her home, 600 Pearl street, to Michael Klein, a rich brewer, of St. Louis, at 11 o'clock Thursday. The Rev. Christian G. Fischer, pastor of the German Lutheran church, officiated.

The bride is 62 years old. Her husband is 69. They met in Florida, where Mrs. Breidt was accustomed to live each winter on an orange plantation of which she is the owner. She is vice-president of the Peter Breidt City Brewery Company, of this city, of which her son-in-law, General Dennis F. Collins, is the president.

The matron of honor at the wedding was Mrs. Anna Barbara Lins, of Newark, a sister of the bride, and the best man was John Van Staden, of Clayton, Ia.

RAHWAY'S MAYOR A QUITTER.

So Declares One of the City's Leading Property Owners.

Rahway, June 10.—A. Edward Woodruff, one of Rahway's largest property owners and most prominent citizens, in an open letter challenges ex-Mayor James B. Furber to debate at a public meeting on the question as to whether "words or deeds are more effective in the upbuilding of a city," in which he says "Mr. Furber can defend his theories by taking the side of the 'words.' I will espouse the side of 'deeds,' and will undertake to show that any coures pursued by a city which makes property owners wish to sell their property and leave town or become tenants rather than owners of property is most detrimental to any city. I feel it is a matter of congratulation that, even though the powers of said city boards are as great and arbitrary as claimed, they have some limitation, to the extent, at least, of not being able to force either myself or any other property owner who has been disposed to expend money in the improvement of our city, to continue to do so."

Mr. Woodruff also states that "the citizens of Rahway paid Mr. Furber, a comparative stranger to most of them, a very great compliment in electing him, as they did, Mayor of the city when opposed by one of our most estimable citizens and that such election offorded him the opportunity of endeavoring to carry into effect his theories in respect to municipal government, and while I will not say he deserted, nevertheless the fact is that he retired when under fire, and to that extent, at least, was a "quitter."

Killed by Falling Trunk.

New York, June 10.—Felomeno Bruno, eleven years old, of No. 290 Front street, was almost crushed to death last night by a trunk that fell from an express wagon crossing the Brooklyn Bridge, above the arch, at Vandewater and Frankfort streets, where she was standing. Felomeno was on her way to St. Gregory's Hospital to visit a schoolmate, who had been injured in the street and taken to the hospital yesterday morning. At the arch she met a group of children and stopped to tell them of her mission. It was early in the evening, when the Bridge was thronged with traffic. As she was about to leave the other children a trunk weighing 130 pounds topped from an express wagon 100 feet above and crashed to the pavement. It struck the child squarely.

Lip Reading Spelling Bee.

New York, June 10.—Perhaps the most novel school exercises ever held in New York city were those which yesterday closed the term of the New York School for the Hard of Hearing at No. 156 Fifth avenue. The chief feature was a "spelling bee," and yet no sound was heard. It was a lip reading bee, in which instead of spelling the words the contestants read them from the lips of Edward B. Nitchie, the principal. Even difficult words and sentences were understood. There were match contests with words and sentences and all the pupils seemed to enjoy it. Both the children of the regular school classes and the adult lip reading pupils took part. The final contest for the championship was won by Mrs. J. F. Hammond by three points.

Children in Suicide Pact.

Cleveland, Ohio, June 10.—Margaret and Helen Curtis, ten and eleven years old, respectively, living with their grandparents in Lakota street, mixed arsenic with their food and ate it yesterday. Margaret is dead and Helen is dying at St. John's Hospital. They entered into a suicide compact, the younger confessed, before she became unconscious, because they wanted to join their mother, who died a short time ago, and wanted to lighten the cares of their grandparents. They thought their grandparents had too much trouble, having been left with four children, the other two being younger than those who took the poison. The father is at Marysville, Kan., whither he went after his wife's death.

Yale Quits Bottle Night.

New Haven, Conn., June 10.—By a vote of the academic freshmen class at Yale an old time Yale custom, that of observing "Bottle Night," has been abandoned, probably for good.

On bottle night, which usually is celebrated on the night of the last examination, everything breakable is hurled from the dormitory windows of the freshmen, and when dawn breaks, the streets and sidewalks are covered with broken crockery and glass. Several times persons have been struck and injured by flying wash bowls or pitchers and it is understood that a hint from the faculty members led to the abolishing of the custom.

Clergymen Beaten by Mob.

Frontenac, Kan., June 10.—The Rev. J. Primrose and the Rev. A. F. Berkstresser, temperance crusaders, who had been arrested on a charge of selling liquor, were attacked and severely beaten by twenty saloon sympathizers Thursday night after being realeased from jail. Both ministers were knocked down and kicked in the face. When they finally escaped both were badly cut and bruised. They had been buying liquor in Frontenac saloons for evidence against the keepers, and were arrested on charges brought by the saloonkeepers for revenge.

Foraker's Name is Hissed.

Dayton, Ohio, June 10.—Mayor Wright, in welcoming the convention of Ohio United Commercial Travelers yesterday said that Senator Foraker should be the next President of the United States. Immediately there were hisses, and many of the travelling men left the hall. When the Mayor said that Foraker was one of the greatest statesmen of the country there was more hisses.

HORSE SHOW ENDS

twice by the same owner to become his personal property and thus the entries of the Harriman's stables are assured for next year's show.

In the champion saddle class there was unusual interest. The first prize of $100 with a reserve ribbon, was divided, the first being for horses 15.2 hands or under and the second for horses over 15.2 hands. Rufus L. Patterson's "Jasmine" won in the first division, while H. G. McElwaine's "Flirtation" got the reserve. In the second division, Otto Kahn's "Supreme" was awarded the blue and Mr. Paterson's "Corotoman" received the reserve prize.

Perhaps the most attractive class for the afternoon was that for four-in-hands, horses to be any height. The first prize of $75 was an incentive and there were three entries, Avondale Farm, Otto H. Kahn and George Watson. Almost from the first, it was the opinion that Mr. Kahn's entry would get the blue. His handsome chestnut geldings were the admiration of all. There was such a striking uniformity in the wheelers and leaders that nearly everybody was willing to concede them first prize. The tally-ho and its equipment were striking. Quite early Mr. Harriman's four-in-hand went to the gate, leaving the Kahn and Watson entries to compete. Francis Guillot, who was handling the Kahn horses, was a favorite and was loudly applauded and cheered when he got the blue. George Watson, Jr., driving his father's entry, was also applauded when he received the second prize.

Class 38 for hunters and jumpers afforded some excitement for the crowd, when J. E. Davis riding his entry, "Agio," was thrown in taking one of the jumps. The rider was not injured in the least and his mount acted in a way that showed his true breeding. He took a few steps off the track and waited until his rider regained his feet and remounted. In this event, which was won by William Carr's "Sapolio," Lewis E. Waring's fine hunter, "Grand Slam," was nervous in appearing before such a large crowd. The best he could do was to win the white ribbon.

J. W. Harriman received a total of eighteen ribbons for the three days, in addition to winning the Lawson cup. He had eighteen horses competing and his success met with general approval. Reginald Vanderbilt finished with fourteen ribbons—four blues, six reds, three yellows and one white. Miss Emily H. Bedford, of Brooklyn, was third, having taken six blues, three reds, one yellow and one white, with an entry of fifteen horses.

The summary of Saturday's awards follow:

Class 50—Combination harness and saddle class—local. First prize, cup: Mrs. E. S. Hooley's g. g. Free Quaker; second, Miss Margaret McCutchen's ch. m. Blaze Away; third, Charles Barry's s. m. Beauty.

Class 25—Saddle horses 14.2 hands and not exceeding 15.2 hands. First prize, offered by S. A. Cruikshank, $50; second prize, $15: First, Otto H. Kahn's br. g. Supreme; second, Avondale Farm's blk. g. Petroleum; third, Rufus L. Patterson's ch. g. Corotoman; fourth, Miss Emily H. Bedford's b. m. Miss Anne.

Class 6—Harness horses over 15 hands and not exceeding 15.2 hands. First prize, offered by George A. Beaton, $50; second prize, $15: First Miss Emily H. Bedford's ch. m. Hildred; second, Avondale Farm's b. s. Nala; third, Lehman Strauss' b. m. Flurette; fourth, Reginald Vanderbilt's br. g. Bravo.

LOST HORSE SHOW MONEY.

Money to the amount of $265, checks for $115 and vouchers, orders and records of ticket sales of the horse show that closed Saturday at the Plainfield Riding and Driving Club were lost yesterday afternoon. Although the name of E. S. Hooley, treasurer of the club, was on a number of the papers and the contents of the packet would give the finder a ready clue as to where it belonged, nothing had been heard of the lost things up to noon today.

A director of the club, who was taking the vouchers, cash and checks to Mr. Hooley's house, dropped them from his carriage. The police were notified. It is understood that the loss will be made good to the club, if the finder does not return the lost articles. The police were told to inform the newspapers that the finder was requested to bring the packet to Maze Edwards, manager of the Casino, where the Riding and Driving club holds its meetings.

City Fire Horses Win.

The fire department class at the horse show on Saturday afternoon, aroused the pride of the large crowd. There were only two entries, "Andy" and "Mack" from the chemical engine No. 3 house in the West End, and the one from the Westfield Fire Department. The local entry outclassed its opponent in every respect, but the Westfield department was handicapped in having a pair of comparatively green horses. Louis Kelly drove the Plainfield pair, and seated beside him was Captain Townley. Both teams were given a lively speed trial on the track and the Plainfield horses won out, receiving first prize, with Westfield second. The borough departments were entered originally but after ward withdrawn.

Junkmen Bestir Themselves.

Fred Joy, driver of the wagon sent out by the Industrial Home of the Salvation Army at Newark, to collect old clothes and such like things as people may feel like giving or selling, was arraigned before Judge Runyon in the city court this morning, on a charge brought by Max Michaelson and other junk dealers. The complainants allege that the Salvation Army is engaged in what is virtually a junk business, without being licensed therefor, and that it is working to the detriment of the local junkmen unlawfully. The case was laid over until next Friday morning. Walter L. Hetfield, Sr., is the junkmen's lawyer; G. W. V. Moy represents the defendant.

H. M. Fisher, formerly of Brooklyn, secretary of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company, New York, has leased the property at 39 Sycamore avenue, and will spend the summer here.

CLOSE COMPETING IN HOLY CROSS CLUB MEET

GOLD MEDALS WON BY JAMES NASH AND EDWARD SCOTT.

An ideal day greeted the young athletes of Holy Cross Club Saturday morning when they met for their contests on the Cricket Field.

As the events showed, the committee had wisely divided the boys in two classes—A and B—so that the boys in each class were evenly matched. The contests were close and exciting and the points rolled up by the winners netted a total which made the net result very close.

In class A the rivalry between James Nash and Russell Conroy was so close that the result was in doubt up to the last event. Nash won out by one point, scoring a total of eighteen points in nine events and Conroy at his heels with seventeen points out of the nine events. William Little finished third with a total of eight points. Accordingly the gold medal goes to Nash, the silver medal to Conroy and the bronze medal to Little.

It was thought by observers that Gardner Bristol would have crowded the leaders but for an unfortunate accident which happened during the pole vault. Bristol had won first place, scoring three points. He then proceeded to beat his own record; lacking only three inches of clearing the bar at seven feet, he went over clean and true but fell sideways with his left arm under him. On getting to his feet it was found that he had cracked his wrist bone. The boy was cheered by the contestants and spectators for the pluck shown and expressions of sympathy were heard on all sides as he was taken from the field and carried home by a nearby automobile.

In class B, Edward Scott carried off the honors with a total of twenty points out of nine events. William Coyle followed closely with a score of eighteen points to his credit. Walter Knowlton finished third with elevent points as his total. Accordingly Scott is awarded the gold medal, Coyle the silver and Knowlton the bronze.

The medals, which are of beautiful design and workmanship, are on exhibition in the show window of Randolph's drug store on West Front street. They will be engraved with the winners' names and presented at the club meeting next Saturday night.

Holy Cross Club now has a winning baseball team, a football eleven which has been defeated only once and now has a track team ready to meet anything of its size and weight in the State of New Jersey. The judges were Messrs. Frank Dencklau, Rev. G. A. Warner, Earl Moran and Mr. Irby.

Following is the summary of events:

Class A: 100 yd. dash—Nash, 1st; Little, 2d; Bristol, 3d; time, 12 seconds. Pole vault—Bristol, 1st; Nash, 2d; Gray, 3d; height, 81 inches. Change in Trinity's Choir.

Miss Ethel Moore, of Cranford, leading soprano of the choir of Trinity Reformed church, has resigned. Her resignation was impelled by the long journey from her home twice a week, which was more aggravated during the past winter by the bad weather. Miss Moore's singing is most attractive, and the congregation learned of her resignation with regret. She will end her connection with the choir July 1, when her place will be taken temporarily by Miss Etta Raybert, of East Second street, this city, for several years leading soprano in the First Presbyterian church.

His First Drunk.

Charles Pierce, colored, eighteen years old, was arrested Saturday night at Grant avenue and West Third street, by Patrolman John Kelly, for drunkenness. He said it was his first offense, and Judge Runyon suspended sentence this morning in the city court.

Adam Young, of South Second street, is quite ill at his home, following two surgical operations.

Miss Emily Stout, of New Brunswick, is visiting at the home of her brother, Arthur Stout, of Washington Valley.

WOMAN'S NERVE SAVED HER LIFE

CLEVERLY GAVE THE ALARM

She Then Sat Down and Played the Piano and Sang Until She Could Stand the Strain No Longer.

Warsaw, Poland.—By the exercise of courage and presence of mind, such as probably few women have possessed, Mme. Stresky, the wife of a Warsaw physician, has just saved herself from murder and robbery under circumstances as thrilling as ever were put into a novel.

Mme. Stresky lives with her husband in a small villa on the outskirts of Warsaw. One night she was alone in the house, but for an old, deaf cook, who dozed in the basement. Mme. Stresky sat with her needlework upstairs in the drawing-room. Suddenly looking up, she saw, in a mirror, the reflection of a huge, ruffianly looking man, cruching behind a screen which stood at the back of her chair. For a moment fear petrified her, as she thought that this man, knowing she was alone, had crept into the house and was awaiting an opportunity to murder her and strip the house of valuables. Outside the street was as quiet as the grave. Her husband would not be back for hours. To rush from the room and cry madly for help meant hastening death.

Then a thought struck her. There was a telephone in the room. She went to it and quickly rang up a family she knew. The servant answered at the other end. "I want your mistress," she said. After two interminable minutes her friend's voice was to be heard.

"My dear Sophy," began the doctor's wife. "Be so good as to send me round that $4,000 roubles this evening. I must pay it into the bank to-morrow morning. I'm very sleepy and want to go to bed."

The friend at the other end of the phone was mystified. They had never had any financial dealing with each other, nor had she heard of the sum in question. But before she could say anything, the doctor's wife began again—this time in French:

"Some wretch has got into the house—I'm alone. Come at once with a patrol, or the first man you can get hold of!"

Then she added, in Polish: 'Send the money as soon as possible. I'll wait up for it."

This done, she sat down at the piano and, with shaking hands and voice, began to play and sing. She calculated that ten minutes at the most would see her out of her terrible dilemma. She could not leave the room without passing by the screen; all she could do was to appear as if she did not know what stood behind her. Her voice got weaker and shakier every minute, though she hoped the ruffian would wait for the fictitious 4,000 roubles. But 15, 20, 25 minutes passed and there was no sign of help. She feared the wretch would suspect her. She determined to ring up the police and ask for help in French, trusting to the chance that one of the inspectors might understand her. Again she went to the 'phone, rang up and gave the necessary number. But the ruffian behind the screen knew the number, too; pushing down the screen, he rushed forward, knife in hand, upon the defenseless woman. She tried to wrench the weapon from him, but in vain. He pointed the knife at her and struck. Happily it clashed against a large metal buckle she wore on her belt. With an oath, he raised it again—it was within an ace of her heart when the sound of breaking glass arrested the murderer's hand. He looked around—a soldier's head appeared in the broken window. Flinging down his knife, he made for the door, only to fall into the arms of another soldier.

The doctor's wife was found on the floor unconscious. The wretch who had all but murdered her was known to the police as one of the most desperate characters in the town, wanted for several crimes.

FORMER LOVER RETURNS AND ELOPES WITH BRIDE

SWEETHEART OF GIRL'S YOUTH TURNS UP AND STOPS PROPOSED WEDDING.

Nashville, S. D.—Frank Bachelder, who mysteriously disappeared from the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson Bachelder, in Harding county, 12 years ago, and who was long believed to be dead, returned to his old home a few days ago just in time to carry off Miss Katherine Claussen, the sweetheart of his youth, and prevent her marriage to Edward Pritchett.

Invitations to Miss Claussen's marriage to Pritchett had been issued by her parents, the young lady's trousseau was ready and all preparations for the celebration of the nuptials had been made. The wedding was to take place at eight o'clock in the evening a few days later at the home of the bride's parents.

But on the day before Bachelder appeared on the scene and as a result the nuptials were not celebrated.

After visiting the home of his parents and revealing his identity the young man went to the home of Miss Claussen, convinced her that he was her old lover and begged her to jilt Pritchet and marry him.

The young woman was overjoyed to see him again and it was not difficult for him to persuade her to elope with him.

Without saying a word to the members of her own family or anybody else of what she intended to do Miss Claussen packed her wedding gown and other clothing in a trunk and prepared to run away with Bachelder. That night Bachelder called at her home and she told her family she was going with him to the home of a neighbor to make a call.

She did not return and her parents became uneasy. A messenger was sent to the home of the neighbor. He returned and reported that she had not been there.

Then her mother went to her room and found a note written by Miss Claussen, in which she said she was going to run away with Bachelder, "the man she had loved and promised to marry when she was young and the man she still loved better than any other in all the world."

Bachelder said he ran away from his parents' home 12 years ago because he was restless and wanted to go out and see the world and that he had not written to his folks because he had met with reverses and thought it well to let them think he was dead.

Just before his return home he made a snug sum of money in Nevada and it was that bit of good fortune that prompted him to come back.

PIG IS BORN WITH TRUNK.

Michigan Freak Resembling Elephant Lives Two Hours.

Fowlerville, Mich.—One of a litter of pigs born on Walt Pedder's farm recently had a head that was combination of elephant and human. The animal lived but two hours.

The pig's body was perfectly formed up to the head. Where the forehead should have been was a trunk about two inches in length. This had a hole in it through which the animal breathed, and bore a striking resemblance to the trunk of an elephant.

Directly underneath was a large eye, the only one possessed by the freak. The ears were large and on the elephant order.

The lower part of the head strikingly resembled the human face.

Michael Pude has secured the body of the freak and is having it mounted.

All the others in the litter were normal.

Cow Is the Size of a Dog.

Atlanta, Ga.—I. H. Overby, of this city, six months ago bought for one dollar a cow, which as a freak of nature is rapidly becoming famous, so famous that Mr. Overby has refused to sell a half interest in her for $500. Though two years old and apparently fully developed, the animal is not as large as the average Newfoundland dog. She is 27 inches high and weighs only 75 pounds.

Scores of persons have called at the residence to view the strange freak of nature. She is named "Bessie Brown" in honor of "Brown Bessie," a cow that was sold at the world's fair in Chicago for $21,000.

The Mystery of Carneycroft

By JOSEPH BROWN COOKE. COPYRIGHT 1907 BY STORY-PRESS CORPORATION

Leaving these as they lay, I retraced my steps and passed once more under the open shaft and on up the gentle slope of the passage-way, holding my pistol well in front of me and wondering at what moment some ghastly sight would meet my gaze and account for the constantly increasing fetidness of the place. I had not lighted my lamp, for the faint glimmer that filtered in through the river water and the illumination from the shaft enabled me to see with reasonable distinctness.

As I proceeded up the tunnel, however, objects began to grow dimmer and dimmer and I was on the point of striking a light when I heard a sudden crash and saw, to my horror, that the lid of the manhole had fallen shut with a bang, leaving me in total darkness.

Before I could ignite my lamp or even collect my thoughts, there was a rush of foul air from the upper end of the tunnel and then some heavy, lumbering creature brushed past me, breathing into my face a hot breath of unspeakable suggestiveness and wheezing and mumbling like a fretful lion just after a generous meal.

I shrank close to the wall of my prison, for such it now was, not knowing what to do or which way to turn, when, to my great relief, the beast, or whatever it was, shuffled awkwardly past me again, still making horrid guttural sounds and breathing deeply as before.

A rat, or some similar little animal, scuttled over my feet at the same moment, stopping long enough to bite my ankle sharply, but I made no sound and held my breath until the more formidable creature was well beyond me and left me a free course to the river.

As soon as I felt that the coast was clear and that I could not be overtaken, I sped down the incline toward the steps and plunged headlong into the water, which glimmered faintly green before me. Striking out under the surface, I swam as far away from the entrance as I could, and, coming to the top at last, I made for the shore and dashed on to my room for whisky and dry clothing.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Another Escape.

It was still early in the evening and such was my anxiety to solve this problem without unnecessary delay that, in spite of my experiences of the day, I resolved to return again to the manhole and see how it happened to have fallen shut and if anything new could be learned from a superficial inspection of the place after dark.

I stopped long enough in the hallway to dispatch a servant to the railway station with my letter to Mac-Ardel so that it would catch the late mail and then, leaving word that I was going out for a short stroll, I put on a heavy coat and left the house.

There was an icy chill in the air that betokened snow in the near future, and I had heard one of the natives say the day before that we would have a storm and a "gol dummed big one, too," before the end of the week.

As I started down the path to the river I could not doubt the accuracy of the fellow's prophecy, and I drew my coat collar well about my neck and shivered fitfully as the rigorous blasts of the coming winter reached through my garments and chilled my very [illegible]

A [illegible] drought of [illegible], followed by heavy snow, in the early autumn was not uncommon in this climate, as I knew full well, and it was usually a serious matter to the farmers, whose fall crops were ruined and many of whose cattle perished; but this year was destined to see such a storm as had not been equaled in many a decade.

The wind howled and whistled through the trees and over the hilltops and then, when a lull would come, it was emphasized by the dull, heavy moaning of the pines and hemlocks far away in the distance beyond the river. At times I even thought I could feel occasional flakes of snow striking me in the face as I strode on over the turf on my way to the tunnel entrance, but I could not be sure, and it might have been only the dust and other small bits of matter that were picked up in the gale and whirled viciously through the air.

When I reached the manhole I was not at all surprised to find that some one had been there before me and again covered it with leaves and bits of grass but, as I tried to raise it once more, never doubting that I could make my escape across the lawn if I were detected in this, my astonishment was profound at discovering that it was securely fastened down from below.

While I was kneeling down on the ground and tugging at the lid to make sure that it was locked, I thought I heard a step behind me and turned my head quickly to see if anyone was approaching. It was, however, apparently nothing more than the snapping of a branch due to the fury of the wind, and I again turned to the manhole, hoping vaguely that, even if I could not open it, I might perhaps hear some conversation through the grating that would serve as a sort of a clew to the grewsome doings beneath.

As I laid my hand on the iron work again it touched a cold, heavy object which had certainly not been there a moment before, and, picking it up and holding it between me and the sky, I saw, to my amazement, that it was my own revolver, to the handle of which was tied a bit of folded paper.

For an instant my heart seemed to stop and I remained rigid on my knees with my arms upraised as I had held out my pistol for inspection, fearing to move through very terror of my own shadow. My breath caught in my throat and then came in short, heavy gasps, while the wind alternately moaned and roared about me and occasional thick damp snowflakes lightly touched my ashen face.

There certainly had been no sound or motion in front of me where I found the pistol, and I had convinced myself that the crackling I had heard at my back, and which was some distance away at best, had been due to nothing more than the wind.

At length, and with trembling fingers, I removed the paper from the stock of the weapon and stuffed it into my pocket, so that I could examine it later, and was about to rise nervously to my feet, when I again heard a slight disturbance in the shrubbery to one side of me and saw a man approaching stealthily and apparently on all fours.

With no thought of the consequences and in an actual frenzy of terror, I raised the pistol and fired at him point-blank, but the cartridge failed to explode or else the chambers were empty, and, with a frantic shriek, I sprang to my feet and threw myself headlong upon him.

He seemed entirely unprepared for this attack, but he made no sound and strove manfully to defend himself as I grappled at his throat and we rolled over and over down the velvety lawn to the river.

I was considerably hampered by my overcoat and having no desire to go into the water with him, I relaxed my efforts somewhat, when, with almost superhuman strength and emitting a cry that indicated a degree of terror equal to my own, he tore himself from my grasp and sped away in the direction of the turnpike.

Feeling, now, that I was his master, I dashed madly after him, pulling off my coat as I ran, and I was gaining slowly upon him in spite of the redoubled efforts that he made, when, on the sharp incline that led down to the road, he stumbled and fell and I was upon him again in a moment.

My victory was short lived, however, for as he struggled fiercely to free himself from my grasp and I, with equal fury, strove to choke or beat him into a state of submission, we again rolled over and over in the grass until, as luck would have it, my leg caught in a strand of the barbed wire fence that enclosed the property at this out-of-the-way point, and once more he succeeded in freeing himself and tore down the road in the direction of the village.

My clothing was torn and mud-stained, my hands and face were bruised and bleeding, I ached in every limb and was well nigh exhausted with the furious and protracted encounter, and I was hatless and coatless into the bargain, but I at least had one cause for congratulation.

In my second wrestle with my hitherto unknown assailant I had been able to get a sufficiently good view of his face to identify him positively and, in spite of the remarkable protestations of ignorance concerning the Carney-Croft mystery which I had heard him make to the widow only the night before, and which I was now forced to believe were but part of a little comedy gotten up for my special delectation, my lusty antagonist was no other than the long-suffering Jenks.

CHAPTER XXIV.

The Doctor Explains It.

When I returned to the house my first thought was to read the note which I had found tied to the pistol and, as I had expected, it was in the Bruce woman's hand and was evidently intended for Jenks, whom I had detected as he was coming to get it. It was brief and to the point and read:

"Try and return this pistol to Mr. Ware's room. Be cautious. Get her to manage it. Do as she says."

I puzzled long and deeply over these words, for they brought a new and hitherto unsuspected person into the case. Whom did the widow mean by "she?" It could not have been Miss Weston, who was too ill to leave her bed, and, after considerable thought, I was forced to believe, as the only possible explanation, that the pronoun referred to one of the servants in the house. This, to my mind, added materially to the gravity of the affair, for if unknown members of the domestic staff were concerned in the matter there was no telling how far the conspiracy might reach nor to what purpose it was carried on.

I had become so accustomed to mysterious happenings of this sort, and my head was so filled with visions of Miss Carney, and with the words I was now determined to say to her, that no impression could have been made on my mind by anything short of a most startling phenomenon.

As I have said, the message was evidently intended for Jenks and was from the widow, who, it seemed equally clear, either was or had been in the subterranean passage holding converse with its loathsome inhabitants.

From my window I could see that there were no lights in her cottage, and I was on the point of venturing forth again and, from a safe distance, watching the pit until she emerged and started for home, when a realization of my physical exhaustion took hold of me and I adopted the wiser plan of remaining in my room.

The night was far from restful, and at the first glimpse of daylight I dressed and returned to the manhole. There was a light fall of snow on the ground and I was not surprised to see that someone had climbed out of the shaft and gone across the lawn toward the Bruce house, but the lid of the manhole was securely fastened down as before.

In my efforts to raise it, or at least to assure myself that it was locked, I found, at the sides, two openings in the grating larger than the others and, slipping my revolver easily back and forth through one of these, I was no longer at a loss to understand how it had appeared so mysteriously the night before.

CLINTON AVENUES DEFEAT DUNELLENS

BOTH TEAMS PLAYED STEADY UNTIL LOCALS "FOUND" VAN ARSDALE.

The Clinton Avenue team defeated Dunellen on the Crescent Oval, Saturday afternoon, by a score of 13 to 4, in what at times was a good contest. Up to the sixth inning both teams were playing a steady game, and VanArsdale was pitching in his old-time form. In the seventh inning the local aggregation "got next" to his delivery and annexed six runs, which took the snap out of the contest. However, Dunellen played much stronger than in the previous amateur league games and it is believed there will be steady improvement. Conway at third distinguished himself by brilliant work, and the team fielded better.

Jack Martin was in the game from start to finish, making three runs and three hits, besides having two put-outs, three assists and no errors. O'Loughlin worked the "squeeze" cleverly, by stealing home from third. The local team is now playing in its usual form and no doubt will be in first place soon. The score:

GOLF LINKS THRONGED DESPITE COUNTER SPORTS

TIE SCORES IN COMPETITIONS ON THE COUNTRY CLUB COURSE.

Notwithstanding that the horse show and other sports made a strong bid for the crowds on Saturday, there was a good field out at the Plainfield Country Club, where several events of interest were scheduled on the links. It was an ideal day for playing the game and many who are not interested especially in seeing fine horses, found much pleasure in following their favorite sport. There were also many social attractions at the clubhouse. In the evening there was the weekly dinner-dance which was attended by a large number of members and friends.

On the links there was the first round at match play for the June cup. G. F. Earl, 15, beat H. S. Rogers, 12, by default; Earl Stockton, 8, beat Hugh F. Fox, 17, 2 up; A. L. Hamilton, 27, beat W. Lester Glenney, 0, by default, and Henry D. Hibbard, 4, beat J. R. Evans, 23, 3 up and 2 to play.

In the competition for the Scratch cup, Frank O. Reinhart, Henry D. Hibbard and Morris J. Dumont were tied with a score of 83 for a leg on the cup.

It seemed to be a day of tie scores, for in the weekly competition for the Golf Committee cup, Morris J. Dumont and Earl Stockton were tied for first place with a net score of 78. These scores were returned:

Morris J. Dumont, 83, 5—78; Earl Stockton, 86, 8—78; W. D. Riggs, 88, 9—79; W. Lester Glenney, 79, 0—79; Henry D. Hibbard, 83, 4—79; Henry G. Lapsley, 91, 10—81; Frank O. Reinhart, 83, 0—83; C. E. Halsted, 90, 6—84; Stuart H. Patterson, 102, 10—92.

C. P. Hamilton won first honors for the Green committee cup with a net score of 71. The scores: C. P. Hamilton, 98, 27—71; G. F. Earl, 94, 15—79; Hugh F. Fox, 97, 17—80; J. R. Evans, 108, 23—85.

It will be noticed that in the above scores the handicaps are rather generous. The Golf committee will see that they are sliced before next Saturday.

At the Park Golf Club Saturday there was the weekly competitions for the President's, Golf Club and Hydewood Park cups, and the ministerial contingent of the club was very successful. Rev. Dr. H. K. Carroll, C. L. Goodrich and Rev. J. O. McKelvey won the honors for the President's as well as the Hydewood cup, while Mr. Goodrich, Mr. McKelvey and Dr. Carroll received the honors for the scratch trophy. The scores:

Rev. Dr. H. K. Carroll, 103, 21—83; Rev. C. L. Goodrich, 100, 14—86; Alexander Gilbert, 113, 23—90; Rev. J. O. McKelvey, 101, 9—92; Walter C. McNaughton, 114, 20—94; Charles A. Reed, 111, 11—100; Reuben Knox, 123, 19—104.

DIAMOND DUST.

The Clinton Avenue team will play the Raritans, of Perth Amboy, on Crescent Oval, Saturday afternoon, and Y. M. C. A. will play the Scotch Plains team at the Plains. Dunellen and Bound Brook will play at Bound Brook at the same time.

A large crowd of Plainfield fans witnessed the game between Princeton and Yale Saturday, when the Tigers scored a second victory over "Old Eli." Heyniger pitched a great game for the orange and black, fanning ten men.

BIG CROWD ATTENDS THE CARNIVAL'S CLOSE

PROFITS TO WATCHUNG COUNCIL WILL PASS $2,000 MARK.

Kindly to the end, the weather gods offered no bar to the grand close of the Knights of Columbus carnival, and as a result of their kindness, the enterprise ended Saturday night in a volume of business and gayety that sent the members of the committee and all the show people home as happy as they were tired. Which, in the case of the committee and its assistants, is saying much.

The biggest crowd of the week came out Saturday night. It was impossible to get accurate figures, for no turnstile was working and nobody with an indicator kept tabs on the crowd, but men who should be able to estimate throngs said the total attendance must have been eight thousand or over. Correspondingly large business was done at all the shows and the different attractions. There was a lively matinee, so that the total receipts for the last day were great enough to make the knights and the showmen profoundly grateful for the complete dissipation of the black clouds that lowered threateningly from the sky in the afternoon.

The receipts of the knights will probably pass $2,000 and may go beyond $2,500. So much business was done during the week, in spite of the discouraging start, that the show people were not at all anxious to go away. The Hippodrome Company had completed arrangements to go direct to Orange, to open there today, but it was said by members of the committee yesterday that Manager Busey was ready to cancel the Orange date and continue here for another week.

The crowd remained numerous until after 11 o'clock. Then it began to thin out gradually, and by midnight the carnival died into the past. Lights died out rapidly, and the loading of the cars went on apace. The transition from gayety to gloom was swift, and by 3 o'clock in the morning the carnival grounds reverted to its original state as a vacant lot.

TENNIS STANDINGS.

The standing of the clubs for the present season in the East Jersey Lawn Tennis Association championship tournaments is Plainfield Country Club first and seconr place in women's singles, and second place in men's doubles; nine points; Elizabeth Town and Country Club, first place in men's doubles, nine points. The mixed doubles event, to be held at the Park Club next Saturday, will have an important bearing on the final result.

In the association championship tournaments first and second places in each event count in points toward the club championship trophy, which was presented by the president, Gardiner H. Miller. There are eleven clubs in th eassociation this year, including the Plainfield Country Club and the Park Club.

Plainfielders Win Golf Match.

Joseph Sherman, who finished in the finals at Baltusrol, last week, and Professional Conway, of the Westfield Golf Club, met "Marty" O'Loughlin and Morris J. Dumont, from the Plainfield Country Club, at Westfield yesterday. The Plainfield pair won the match by 4 up and 3 to go. Another match is scheduled for next Sunday at Cranford.

GET GIRL'S ASSAILANTS

Police Make an Important Capture for the Authorities at Elizabeth.

NABBED JUST IN TIME

Trio Had Made Arrangements to Continue Their Flight to Buffalo—One of Them Confesses to Chief Kiely.

Just as they had completed plans for a journey to Buffalo, N. Y., to continue flight from the Elizabeth police, three tough young men who were sought by the authorities of Elizabeth for a brutal assault on a fourteen-year-old girl were captured in this city yesterday afternoon. The prisoners, William Dickson, John Damogar and Henry Althoff, all about twenty-one years old, were caught in a house on East Fourth street by Patrolmen John Kelly and Cornelius McCarthy.

The assault with which they are charged took place a month ago. The girl was taken out in a boat at Elizabethport, and the three men abused her so brutally as to leave her in a dangerous condition. They escaped, and the police of Elizabeth scoured this section for them in vain.

Chief Kiely, with other police heads of New Jersey and New York, had been asked to help in the search for them, and he kept at work on the case. Yesterday afternoon he gained the clue he sought, and traced the trio to the Fourth street house.

He had the place watched, and sent word to Elizabeth. Chief Tenney, of that place, dispatched Detective Richard Mattison to this city with the necessary warrants. A while after that it was learned that Althoff had returned to the house, and Chief Kiely sent Kelly to place him under arrest. Kelly's instructions were to keep his prisoner in the house until the other two came in, and make the captures complete.

Althoff was sitting on the porch in his stocking feet when the officer approached. He took fright at Kelly's appearance, and bolted indoors. Kelly covered the short distance between him and the house in time to se Althoff run down into the cellar. Kelly followed him, and caught him as he tried to get out at the rear.

Kelly took the prisoner upstairs to his room and waited. A few minutes later Patrolman McCarthy, with the Elizabeth detective, reached the house and joined Kelly in the room. They had not long to wait before Dickson and Damogar came in, one after the other. Their arrest was accomplished speedily and without trouble.

At the station house last night Althoff, breaking down under examination by Chief Kiely, made a full confession. His statement exonerates a married man who was arrested for the crime in Elizabeth. The victim identified that man as one of her assailants, but Althoff and his companions said last night that he had nothing to do with the crime.

The trio will be turned over to the Elizabeth police today. They had been staying at the Fourth street house a week. Dickson and Damogar worked for the J. D. Loizeaux Lumber Company. Althoff was idle. They told the chief that they had completed plans to go to Buffalo last night, fearing they had stayed too long within reach of the Elizabeth police.

The trio are said to be members of the notorious Dutch Ides gang. They are expected to receive heavy sentences.

SOME SEATS LEFT.

For the Benefit Performance of "The Peasant Prince" Tonight.

Indications point to a large house at the benefit performance of "The Peasant Prince" at the New Plainfield theatre tonight. The proceeds are to go to the hospital.

Although the sale of tickets has been brisk, there are still plenty of good seats left for those who have not yet provided themselves with accommodations. The box office will be open tonight for the sale of seats. During the day seats may be obtained at Schreiner's drug store, Second street and Park avenue.

The opera will be presented in improved form. There will be special scenery and electrical effects.

Woman and Babes Homeless.

Frank Conger was arrested on Cottage place, last night, for fighting with his wife. He was held this morning, pending some settlement of his home affairs, which the police say are in a deplorable state. He is said to be dissolute, and has not provided for his wife and two schall children. The latter are said to be destitute, and have been sleping much in barns and such places. Conger is said to have used barns for his lodgings also. The Organized Aid Association was notified of the case this morning.

FULL EXPLANATION OF A REVOLVER SHOT

WHAT LED UP TO IT AND WHY IT SOUNDED IN THE STILLY AIR.

That sound of a shot over which the residents in the neighborhood of Watchung avenue and Front street have been wondering since 4 o'clock this morning was made by the revolver of Sergeant Herbert Overbaugh, who had it pointed at the time in the direction taken by a young German in ardent flight. The young man was fleeing to escape the necessity of explaining in detail how and where he had obtained possession of the most of a new double set of heavy harness, which the sergeant found him carrying up East Second street a few minutes before.

Overbaugh saw the young man, with part of the harness in a sack and the rest of it in a dress suit case, from the corner of Watchung avenue. He called the young man to him and asked where he got the harness and where he was taking it to. The young man said he got it at a store here in the afternoon, and was taking it to his employer, a man named Brocker, who lived on Belvidere avenue. Overbaugh said he would have to bring him to the police station for further examination, and the young man turned up Watchung avenue with him. He walked quietly for a short distance, apparently satisfied to go along. Then he suddenly dumped the sack and the suit case in front of the officer, and fled. Overbaugh gave chase, but could not catch up with him. He fired his revolver—the sound of which put all the respectable householders of the neighborhood in a flutter—but the fleeing youth did not stop. He kept on until he crossed the brook, and as far as the police now know he is running yet. The excitement engendered by the shot, however, died away after a bit, and it is hoped that the wonderment is now allayed. The police are not without hope that they will get the young man, and thus end the case, like a fairy story, with everybody—excepting, perhaps, the young man—happy.

Overbaugh lugged the harness to the police station, where it now awaits a claimaint. The bridles and the collars are missing.

TURNS STATE'S EVIDENCE

Joseph Hummell Testifies that He Fired Cornish Property at Chas. T. Vail's Direction.

MISS GILLEN IN COURT

Plainfield Woman, Under Indictment, Listens Calmly to the Story Told by the Witness.

Former Postmaster Charles T. Vail, at one time a well-known resident of this city, was placed on trial at Flemington yesterday afternoon on an indictment charging him with burning the Cornish store property at West Portal, on February 24 last.

Joseph S. Hummell, who acted as Vail's assistant, who was indicted with Vail, was the first witnessed called, and caused a sensation by turning State's evidence. He admitted he set fire to the building at Vail's direction.

Miss Ellen Gillen, of Plainfield, who bought the property from Vail a few days prior to its destruction, and who was indicted with Vail and Hummell, was seated by the side of the ex-postmaster. She listened attentively to Hummell's story how he had poured kerosene about the store and pried over the red hot stove with a heavy oak stick; how he ran for water, stumbled and let the first bucket of water fall before he reached the building, and how Vail had taken the bolts from the stove so as to let it topple over and burn her building.

The building and contents were entirely destroyed. There was $3,000 insurance on the stock and $3,700 on the building.

Hummell was still on the stand when court adjourned. He said at Vail's request he poured kerosene on the floor and on the counters. He said he placed two scuttles of coal in the stove,. After it became heated he upset the stove in the direction of the oiled counter and touched a match to some waste that had been provided for the purpose.

Previous to that Hummell said he took some red hot coals from the stove in a shovel and held the shovel beneath the calf of his leg until his trousers and underwear had burned through. This Hummell said was to show that the stove had fallen on him.

Under cross-examination Hummell said he had known Vail about eight years, had always been his friend and was not now his foe. He had lied when he testified before the investigation to the accident story. The State, he said, had offered him no lienency. When court adjourned Vail's bondsmen surrendered him and he was locked up. Vail has been living in Plainfield since he was first arrested.

LOCAL ASSOCIATION WANTS PUBLIC PARKS

PLAN SUGGESTED HAS THE ENDORSEMENT OF MAYOR FISK.

Mayor Charles J. Fisk referred to the Common Council, at its adjourned meeting, last night, a communication received from the Town Improvement Association, of Plainfield and North Plainfield, in which the association urged the setting apart of certain land to be used as public squares or parks for the city's use. It was stated that at the present rate of building it will not be long before it will be impossible to get land for the purposes required.

The association agreed to lay out and care for such property designated as parks, as in the present case of Plainfield's park on West Eighth street. It further urged the establishment of playgrounds for children and that the Public Service Corporation be requested to paint all of its poles an inconspicuous dark green, and advocated reform in the matter of certain posters placed on the bill boards about the city.

Mayor Fisk placed his stamp of approval on the park idea and suggested that land on West Front street, near Rock avenue, be acquired for a park in that part of the city. He said that owing to its location it would never be used for building purposes and would be an ideal place for a city park.

The communication was referred to the committee on public affairs and will be heard from later.

Pavement Ordinance Again Before Council in an Amended Form.

VOTE NOT UNANIMOUS

Bond Issue Also Changed So That Cost of Improvement Is Now Placed at $40,000.

Brick pavement for the business section of the city was again the topic of interest at the adjourned meeting of the Common Council, last night. This time the ordinance, as originally offered by Chairman Ginna, of the street committee, was placed on its second reading, after being amended to omit North avenue, between Park and Watchung avenues, from the streets intended to be paved. However, this avenue was not left out without objection.

Mr. Gloak moved to adopt the ordinance in its original form with North avenue included, but Mr. Ginna's motion took precedence and was adopted, Councilmen Ginna, Mellick, Montgomery, C. C. Randolph, Tyler and Daniel voting in favor and Councilmen Gloak and Frank Randolph against the amendment.

The amendment was made in section one, and another amendment in section two of the ordinance was also made so as to change the total bond issue from $47,000 to $40,000, and the number of bonds and their time of expiration. Originally the ordinance called for an issue of $47,000, which included $7,000 for paving North avenue. By omitting the avenue, it brought the cost down to $40,000, and Mr. Ginna's amendment provided that on September 1, 1910, there shall be four bonds due, and a like number due September 1, 1911, and from 1912 to 1918 there shall be two bonds due each year, and from 1919 to 1924 three bonds each year. In response to a question from Mr. Gloak, Mr. Ginna stated that the amendment was drawn by and met the approval of Corporation Counsel Marsh. He explained further that by this method the city would get between $10,000 and $12,000 from the Public Service Corporation, when the assessments are returned, and this would be an advantage. The ordinance also makes provisions for the appointment of commissioners by the court to asess benefits and damages, as originally proposed. The ordinance was finally adopted on second reading as amended and Mr. Ginna's motion prevailed that the city clerk give the usual two weeks' notice that it is the intention of the Common Council to adopt it at the regular July meeting when a public hearing will be granted.

After this action had been taken Mr. Montgomery stated that he wanted it understood that he still favored brick pavement for North avenue and if someone would offer a supplementary ordinance covering that avenue he would vote for it.

His colleagues who have from the first favored pavement for North avenue, were disappointed at Mr. Montgomery's action in not voting to retain North avenue in the original ordinance, when he had an opportunity to vote that way, but he explained that his only idea in voting for the amended ordinance was that he was afraid that by not doing so he might defeat the permanent pavement improvement entirely for this year.

It appeared to be the opinion of people outside of the Common Council that the amended ordinance would not be adopted on third reading and that there is still a possibility of the improvement being held up for this year, at least.

Honor for Borough Young Woman.

A rare and much-coveted honor has recently been conferred on Miss Helen Stuart Weir, of 20 Rockview avenue, North Plainfield, in the award of the gold medal for three bronze groups of lions, at the Royal Forty Year Jubilee Exposition, at Bucharest, Roumania. The award is all the more prized, aside from the fact that the work received such recognition, because the critics who passed upon it are considered the most strict of any to be found in Europe.

JAIL FOR JOHN ANDERSON

Somerset's Deputy Sheriff Gets Ninety Days for Tampering with Skillman Jury.

IS ALSO FINED $300

Constable Mantz Must Pay $100 and Constable Wyckoff Gets Off With Smaller Amount.

Deputy Sheriff John L. Anderson, a member of one of the oldest and aristocratic families of Somerset county, was yesterday sentenced by Judge Theodore Booraem in the Somerset court to serve 90 days in the county jail and to pay a fine of $300 for tampering with the jury which failed to agree upon a verdict in the case of William H. Stillman, the former president of the New Jersey Horticultural Society, who was tried for forging the will of his neighbor, William Lanehart, for the alleged purpose of getting possession of an estate valued at $0,000.

Constable Dennis Wikoff and Ambrose Mantz were fined $25 and $100, respectively, for allowing Anderson to communicate with the jury while it was in their custody. The court spent the day in hearing evidence in behalf of the prisoners, who were represented by an able group of lawyers. The testimony showed a strong question of veracity between Deputy Sheriff Anderson and several jurors, who swore that Anderson had approached them during the triay. Anderson testified that John H. Horner, a juror, had approached him in a hotel and asked him how much it was worth for a man to hang out on a verdict. Horner took the stand and emphatically denied Anderson's story. He said it was Anderson who had first approached him. Anderson, the witness swore, told him that he had two jurors staying at his house who were all right for Skillman. Judge Booraem discredited Anderson's statement by saying that it did not conform with his suspicious actions in approaching other members of the jury and in calling jurors from the room while the jury was deliberating. The court said that Anderson's action was criminal and that the dignity of the court must be sustained by passing a severe sentence.

Strong influences were brought to bear in behalf of Anderson, and a hard fight to save him is still on. After his sentence he was paroled in the custody of his counsel to give him an opportunity to make immediate application to a judge of the Supreme Court for an appeal. It is believed here today that the court is not yet through with the case, and that there will be more probing to reach the instigator of Anderson's act.

MAY PUT LABOR TICKET UP AT NEXT ELECTION

MACHINISTS START MOVEMENT TO BRING UNIONS ACTIVELY INTO POLITICS

There is a possibility that a union labor ticket will be presented to the voters at the next election. Plainfield Lodge, No. 167, International Association of Machinists, took action looking to that move last night.

There was an animated discussion as to the advisability of entering politics, and it was decided to do so. A committee was appointed to confer with the other unions as to the formation and presentation of an independent ticket next fall. The machinists will press their plans for political activity with vigor.

It was a big meeting in more ways than one. Candidates to the number of thirty-one were initiated, and fifty-three applications were received.

LIBRARY DIRECTORS REPORT TO THE COUNCIL

PRESENT STATEMENT SHOWING ITS FINANCIAL CONDITION.

According to the usual custom, the directors of the Plainfield Public Library and Reading Room presented its annual report to the Common Council at the adjourned meeting, last night, showing the financial condition and number of volumes received during the year and the total number now at the library.

Under the head of salaries, the total amount reported disbursed was $3,000. The disbursements for periodicals, binding and putting in order periodicals and papers, stationery and printing, fuel and lighting, repairs, insurance, etc., were $2,300, which together with the amount of $2,500 for books, makes a total of $7,800. The receipts, including $7,500 from the city and $300 from fines, makes the total $7,800.

The total number of volumes at the library, including those in the Babcock Library, is 32,360, which comprises 827 books purchased, and 326 acquired by gift. The report was received and filed.

Mr. Mellick called up on third reading his amendment to the ordinance relating to the morals, peace and good order of the city, which provides a penalty for throwing papers, including circulars, etc., about the streets. For violations of the ordinance a fine of $10 may be imposed. The ordinance was adopted on third reading and as soon as the Mayor affixes his signature to it it will be effective.

LONG STANDING AUTO CASE DISPOSED OF TODAY

CHAUFFEUR DECLARES IN COURT ISAAC P. RUNYON "BUTTED IN."

After several adjournments, the charges of overspeeding against John L. Pruitt, a chauffeur employed by George Paddock, of Newark, a dealer, were heard in the city court this morning. Pruitt was spotted by the police on May 5, when the auto dragnet was first cast One policeman took his number in the morning and another in the afternoon.

In pleading guilty, Pruitt, who was accompanied by Mr. Paddock, said he and his employer had been misrepresented in their apparent intention to combat the prosecution.

"Isaac P. Runyon has misrepresented us grossly," he said. "He was not our counsel—I want that understood. To make sure that no bill would be run against us I had him come to our office and state distinctly that he did not represent us."

Judge Runyon fined Pruitt $25 on each charge, but suspended sentence. Pruitt came here on May 5 in a car that Theodore Castner, a friend of Mr. Runyon, got from Mr. Paddock in place of his own. Mr. Runyon's wife and father-in-law are said to have been in the car when Pruitt was caught overspeeding the second time. Mr. Paddock said that he never had any intention of fighting the cases, and he and Pruitt had stayed away from the hearings set on word from Mr. Runyon, under the impression that Pruitt's presence was not required each time. When they finally awoke to their true status, Mr. Paddock said, they hastened to straighten the matter out. Mr. Runyon was not in court.

MR. RUNYON RESIGNS.

Quits Fair Acres Club Because It Meets Where "Bookies" Worked.

Isaac P. Runyon is no longer a member of the Fair Acres Driving Club. His letter of resignation was received by the club last night.

In it Mr. Runyon said, in effect, that he felt it would not be right for him to be associated in any way wiith a race track where bookmaking was allowed. It was on the Fair Acres track, known generally as the driving park, that the Watchung Hunt Club steeplechases, whereat three or four wicked and undoubted bookies operated, were held. All the members of the club present jumped up and moved that Mr. Runyon's resignation be accepted. Mr. Runyon was not an old member of the club.

When the Runyon resignation had been enthusiastically disposed of, the club furthered plans for a gala meet to be held at the track July 4. It will be a matinee affair, and the entry lists and attendance are expected to be unusually large.

DENIES CONTRACT GRAFT

George J. Tobin Goes Before Investigating Committee Today and Gives His Side.

HAS FIGURES PREPARED

Declares He Knew Nothing of Other Bids On Plumbing In New Prison Wing.

George J. Tobin, the local plumber, who was brought into the Hahn investigation through testimony given by Contractor Lawton at Saturday's session, went to Trenton today for the purpose of appearing before the committee. According to an interview which he gave out last night, Mr. Tobin said he had not retained counsel and felt perfectly confident that through his testimony, the committee would be satisfied that the State had received full value for the money paid to him in plumbing contracts.

Mr. Tobin said that he had prepared excerpts from his book accounts to give to the committee, and added that he would gladly defray the expense if the committee would hire experts to go over his books, invoices and bills to prove that in every job he had given the State all that the contracts called for at prices that were reasonable. He said:

"In the first place, the contract price for the State prison wing plumbing and heating work was not $24,000, as has been widely stated. It was $20,000." And he produced his copy of the original sub-contract with Lewis Lawton & Son to substantiate his figures.

The document showed that he had entered into an agreement on September 7, 1905, to do the plumbing work and install the entire heating system of the wing, according to specifications, for $20,000. The agreement was attested by H. K. Higgins for Tobin, and for Lawton by L. S. Skillman. The contractor, continuing his explanation, said:

"The work has been completed, but there are some things to be gone over that have led to the final 15 per cent. payment of $3,000 being held in reserve for a time. There were delays owing to the bad winter, but we practically completed our contract four months ago.

"Our dealings were with the Lawton firm. The Paulley jail people of New York, who control patent cell-lock devices, secured the general contract for the wing, and then sublet a large part of it to Lawton. We did not deal directly with the commissioners.

"I am prepared to state to the committee that the materials for the plumbing and heating work at the State prison wing, exclusive of fixtures, cost me $12,000. It required about fifteen miles of pipe for the heating system.

"I knew nothing of the two other bids for the work, which it is alleged were presented for $12,000 and $14,000. I know that I was asked to bid, and that I did so, offering to do the work at the best figure I could furnish. When it is considered my materials cost me more than the total of one of the other bids is said to have been, it doesn't seem that a $12,000 proposal could have been presented in absolute good faith. In addition to the cost of materials, there must be considered the big items of labor and purchase of fixtures.

"I have an office in Trenton, and was in a position to get right to work on the wing when I presented my bid. I do a great deal of work throughout the State, and had the large machinery and a large force of men for such a contract." "It is said that you have grown wealthy as a result of your State work. Is that true?" Mr. Tobin was asked. He replied:

"Not yet," and the contractor smiled, finally laughing outright. "If I had to depend on the work that I get from the State I wouldn't get along very well. In every case where I have contracted with the State it has been after careful figuring on specifications furnished me and where my dealings were directly with the State officials my bids have been presented in accordance with law and the advertisements for proposals. I have won the contracts because my bids were lower than others. Among the contracts I have secured in Trenton from State corporations was that for the Trenton Turkish baths.

"Of the eight plumbing contracts let by the State this year I have received three, and these were awarded to me because my bids were the lowest presented. One of the three contracts was the work for the State House wing, and another for a little double cottage at the State prison. I have nothing to conceal in connection with any of the work that I have done for the State or for any of my patrons.

The Y. M. C. A. team will play its first game this season against Scotch Plains at the 'Plains, Saturday, and they expect a hard fight. Minford will do the box work and Ralph Schoonmaker will catch.

Walter Nelson will join the Y. M. C. A. team a week from Saturday for the season. He will complete his studies at Rutgers College by that time.

Captain Howard Craig expects to use Marsh at first base from now on. He will be of considerable strength to the team.

Several big league managers are after Pitcher Deshon, of Cornell, but the collegian has refused all offers to play professional baseball.

Jimmy Collins has left Boston and joined the Philadelphia Athletics, in exchange for Knight, who goes to Boston. Both players are putting up a fine game.

McGuire, the veteran ball player, who has been with the Highlanders for several years, has assumed the management of the Boston Americans, and better things are expected of the aggregation. He will be missed by the New York team.

"Rube" Oldring is playing the game of his life for the Philadelphia Athletics. His stick work and fielding is spoken of by the press of the country as brilliant.

Jack McCarthy, formerly of Brooklyn, has signed with the Kansas City Club, of the American Association.

Don't lose faith in the New York Giants. They will surprise the fans before the season is over. Because they have started in bad in the west does not mean that they have lost the pennant.

GOLF.

Jerome D. Travers will not compete in the one-day open golf tournament at the Plainfield Country Club on Saturday, as expected, as he will play Thursday, Friday and Saturday in the open tournament at the Wilmington, Del., Country Club, where he will practice for the amateur championship.

Julius E. Erickson, chairman of the open tournament to be played at the Plainfield Country Club on Saturday, expects to receive a large number of entries this week.

This will be the best week in the history of the Atlantic City Country Club, for course and clubhouse have been put in apple pie order for the second annual championship of the Women's Eastern Golf Association. Two afternoons of medal play at eighteen holes each will determine the championship and the mornings will be devoted to special contests. On Thursday and Friday the Griscom cup matches will be played for by the women's teams of Boston, Philadelphia and New York over the same course.

The Golf committee of the Plainfield Country Club will get busy this week in readjusting the handicaps of some of the players who are now in Class B. Their low scores during the past week is altogether too good for such fat handicaps.

A special cup will be presented by the Fairfield County Golf Club to the player making the best net score for eighteen holes upon any one day from June 15 to July 13, inclusive. All starters must turn in their cards, whether complete or incomplete, under penalty of disqualification.

H. H. Hilton is a late convert to the croquet style of putting. He used a straight-faced iron putter in the amateur championship and made many fine shots, using only his right hand.

James Edmundson, of the Royal Portrush, won the professional championship of Ireland played at Portrush. He led the qualifying round with 76 and in the final beat B. Snowball, of Portmarnock, by 2 and 1. The same week at Portrush H. M. Cairnes beat H. A. Boyd in the final of the sixteenth Irish amateur championship by 7 up and 6 to play. This reversed the final of 1906.

James Robb was the only Scot to lose in Scotland vs. England match played at St. Andrews the Saturday before the amateur championship. John Ball put him out by 6 and 4, which was a tip for the championship that no one noticed. Scotland won the match by 8 to 1.

Plainfield, N. J., June 11, 1907.

It now appears that the generous and hospitable host at the banquet at Hightstown last Tuesday night to a number of leading politicians and State officials was George J. Tobin, the Plainfield plumber, who does all the plumbing jobs for the State and figures in all the building contracts that have been so wonderfully showered on Contractor Lawton, of Trenton. Tobin's luck is phenomenal. There was one plumbing contract in which two other plumbers bid $12,000 and $14,000, respectively. Tobin got the work for $24,000, through the good nature of Contractor Lawton, who, it would appear in the transaction, virtually made a gift of $12,000 to the Plainfield plumber. Contractor Lawton will be on hand today when the investigation is resumed, and perhaps Inquisitor Backes will be able to extract from him more about the friendly services of State Architect Poole to Lawton and the truly fraternal conduct of Lawton to State Plumber Tobin, of Plainfield, the giver of the Hightstown banquet last Tuesday night.—Newark Morning Star.

MILLIKEN BROTHERS FAIL

Big Structural Steel Concern Dragged Down By a Light Money Market.

RECEIVER ASKED FOR

Former Plainfielder the Head of the Organization—Had Many Important Contracts.

With more orders on its books than ever before in its history and with its big steel factory at Mariners' Harbor, Staten Island, running night and day, the firm of Milliken Brothers, structural steel manufacturers and constructors, with business in all parts of the globe, went into bankruptcy yesterday, with liabilities of $6,500,000. Of this enormous total, $3,500,000 of the debts are unsecured, and the remainder is secured by a first mortgage on the factory on Staten Island. The Milliken family has always been identified with Plainfield and Mrs. Samuel F. Milliken, mother of Foster Milliken, president of the company, resides with her daughter, Mrs. DeGraff, of Central avenue.

Holding court in the Century Club New York, last night, Judge Holt, of the United States Circuit Court, heard arguments for two hours for the appointment of a receiver. No decision was reached, but announcement will be made by him today as to the man to be selected.

Lack of working capital and inability to borrow necessary funds because of big loans already negotiated from various banks, coupled with the tight money market, are the causes assigned for the failure.

There will be no cessation in the work in hand, it was stated last night. The receiver will make every possible effort to carry out the gigantic plans of the concern and to float it to a substantial basis. That it should go on the shoals at a time when its apparent prosperity was a source of marvel to the business world, and when orders for steel and construction work were coming in from China, Japan, the West Indies, and Mexico, as well as from many parts of America, caused astonishment in business circles generally and produced mild alarm.

Among the big contracts now being filled by the firm from its model plant in the front yard of New York, as it was often said, are the structural work for the forty-one story Singer Building, at Broadway and Liberty street; the Pennsylvania terminal and several sugar plantations in Cuba and other parts of the West Indies.

Application for an involuntary petition in bankruptcy was made by the law firm of McDonald & Bostwick, representing creditors holding claims amounting to only $15,904. The clients whom they represent, as given in the petition, are the Niles-Bement-Pond Company, with a claim of $11,628; Snyder & Black, $403; John A. Roebling Sons' Company, $2,950, and Robert W. Hunt & Co., $923. No names were given as to the larger creditors, of whom there is a large number. It is supposed, however, that the United States Steel Company is one of the corporations holding a big claim. From this company Milliken Brothers purchased much of the big iron used in their steel factory. They also bought large quantities of pig iron in the open market.

Founded more than fifty years ago, the business passed into the hands of Foster and Edward F. Milliken, in 1883, when the founder, Samuel Milliken, died. For several years prior to 1883 the firm was known as Milliken, Smith & Co. Up to 1890 the firm confined its attention to iron commission business, but after that it began iron and steel contracting and installation, making rapid progress. It established branches in Pittsburg, San Francisco, Havana, Mexico, Honolulu, Johannesburg and Cape Town. The business became so large that it was incorporated in May, 1902, with a capital stock of $2,000,000, which was increased in July, 1905, to $2,500,000, and again in January, 1907, to $5,000,000.

One of the reasons given for the incorporation was that a firm, in case of the death of one of the partners, it might lead to legal complications. Edward F. Milliken became president of the corporation, which was organized under New York laws. Foster Milliken was elected vice-president, and Francis Dykes secretary and treasurer. Edward F. Milliken died last November in the Adirondacks, from appendicitiis and was succeeded by Foster Milliken as president, with Henry S. Manning vice president.

Officers of the corporation at the present time are: Foster Milliken, president; Francis Dykes, secretary and directors, Foster Milliken, E. F. Milliken, Francis Dykes, H. S. GROWTH OF RELIGIOUS WORK IN THE EAST END

ADDITION TO FAITH CHAPEL WILL AID IN THE EFFORTS OF ITS OFFICIALS.

The growing need of religious work in the East End of the city, which is being met by the earnest workers at Faith chapel, has necessitated the building of an addition to the chapel building. This work is now well underway and will be completed in a short time. It is intended to provide suitable quarters for the Baraca Class, a Bible class for men, and the Ladies' Bible class. The men's class has a membership of forty-five and the women's class a membership of twenty-seven. It will also provide a room for holding prayer meetings.

This work was started ten years ago where the chapel is located, by the organization of a Sunday-school class of sixteen. The present membership including the Home Department is 230, while the church membership is seventy-five and constantly growing. Rev. J. W. Musson, who has been the pastor for three years, has had great success in his work. He is a graduate of Crozier Theological Seminary, being one of five students standing the highest in that class. He is an able and efficient preacher and pastor. On Sunday a Junior Baraca Class will be organized for boys and L. W. Randolph will be the teacher. The present trustees are President, C. W. McCutchen; treasurer, E. L. Bonny; secretary, W. A. Conger; U. B. Crane and L. W. Randolph.

For the purpose of aiding the building fund, L. W. Randolph announces that on Saturday he will give the entire receipts from his soda water fountain to that fund. He has issued 3,000 tickets especially for that day and nearly all of them have been sold. However, it will not be necessary to have a ticket to aid in this work. All money received from this source will be given to the fund.

ELECTRICITY FROM THE BURNING OF REFUSE

ONE OF SEVERAL PROPOSITIONS OFFERED THE COMMON COUNCIL.

Edmond G. F. R. due Mazuel, who set forth in his petition to the Common Council, at the adjourned meeting, last night, that he is a citizen of the United States, a civil engineer and a representative of the United States Construction Company, of No. 41 Wall street, New York, made a startling proposition to the city to furnish light and heat by electricity through the burning of refuse, provided the Common Council would give him at least two acres of land free, and an exclusive franchise to erect and maintain an incineration plant.

He agreed to remove dead animals, organic matter, and all refuse except from private residences and private or public buildings, destroy it by his system and furnish the city street lights of sixteen candle power illumination at $12 per year for each light. He asked for the privilege of stringing wires, laying conduits, etc., and agreed at the end of twenty-five years to sell the plant to the city at a price to be agreed upon. He further offered to supply metal top wagons for the collection of all refuse and other stuff to be burned and to place metal cans about the city for the collection of waste material, all bi-products to be available for the city's purchase.

The communication was a lengthy one, setting forth in detail just what the petitioner agreed to do for the many privileges asked for. It was referred to the committee on public affairs for further consideration.

This is the same construction company that has undertaken building contracts in this city before, and intended to construct the proposed ice and cold storage plant at Watchung, a story concerning which was published at some length in The Daily Press several months ago.

GRADUATION EXERCISES AT SEMINARY TODAY

FOUR YOUNG WOMEN COMPLETE COURSE AND RECEIVE DIPLOMAS.

June, nature at its best, a host of girls, a wealth of flowers and the Senior class, with the new honors of graduation upon them, are parts of the beautiful picture repeated each year, with renewed charm, at the closing exercises of the Plainfield Seminary on West Seventh street. The exercises this morning were of unusual interest, the members of the graduating class reading their essays, which are generally read to the faculty only. The hearty applause of the audience testified to their appreciation of the innovation.

The architectural idea ran through the themes, Miss Florence Stuart telling of Canterbury Cathedral, a noble and inspiring structure. Miss Caroline Eudora Sullivant describing the Feudal Chateau in France and its uses as a fortified castle; Miss Katharine DuBois Titus, interpreting the meaning of the Parthenon Frieze to the delight of the audience, and Miss Edith Griscom charming her listeners with her story of Modern Bridge Building which is a story of utility made beautiful and strength transformed into the picturesque, sometimes the majestic.

The following musical program was rendered, the pupils of the school playing with great skill and accuracy, and Miss Thomas from New York singing delightfully both the grave and gay selections.

Overture to Der Freischutz, Weber. Miss Margaret Leal, Miss Susanna Wharton, Miss Ray Holey, Miss Nanon West. (a) Blow, blow, Thou Winter Winds, Dr. Arne; (b) Where Be Going- Cornish song; (c) Who'll Buy My Lavender- Edward German; Miss Thomas. Aria from Samson and Delilah, Saint Saens; Miss Thomas. Slavonic Dance, Dvorak; Miss Margaret Leal, Miss Susanne Wharton, Miss Ray Hooley, Miss Nanon West.

The presentation of diplomas was made by Miss Arnold, principal of the school. She wished for them two gifts, the power to create ideals of life and character that would be high and ennobling and the power to be loyal to those ideals.

Miss Kenyon, the principal emeritus, (who always strikes a key note) added that these graduates would not go to the cathedrals or classical structures to know the character of a people, they would go to the homes, and she urged the class to remember that the home and the household would claim them now.

Miss Helen Adams and Miss Mabel Hooley were members of the graduating class, who have not completed their studies on account of illness.

Graduates from Stevens Institute.

Among the students to be graduated from Stevens Institute of Technology on Thursday morning are Edwin I. Weseman, of East Sixth street, and Charles Ogden Faber, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Faber, Jr., of Mercer avenue. Mr. Faber will go to Aurora, Ill., where he will take the position of mechanical engineer in a large electrical plant.

GRIZZLY RODENT CAUSES PANIC IN A STREET CAR

RAT APPEARS IN MIDST OF HOUSEWIVES WHO SEEK SAFETY IN HEIGHT.

Indianapolis, Ind.—No one knows how it got there, but a shaggy, overgrown veteran rat, with long straggling whiskers and a pleading, wistful face, was a passenger on a street car which left Illinois and Washington streets at five o'clock the other night. The car was well filled, mostly with West Indianapolis housewives with suppers to prepare for six o'clock husbands. In the confusion and turmoil the big, unoffending rat, without money, ticket or transfer, settled comfortably in a dark corner under a woman's skirt. The conductor gave two bells; the motorman threw on the current and the car, loaded with possibilities, bounded down the rails to the south.

It was not until the car had turned into South street and was bowling merrily to the west that the venerable and battle scarred stowaway was prodded into action. Reposing in content beneath the skirts of an ample colored woman he merely whisked his tail when she readjusted her avoirdupois and inadvertently dug him one in the short ribs with a massive heel. Sufficient unto the day were the skirts thereof, and the rat overlooked the indignity in return for shelter. Another shifting of the bulk above brought a jab under the chin that even the meekest and mildest of rodents would have resented. The wistful face contracted in fury and the straggling whiskers stuck out straight—a beautiful fringe for the white teeth that snapped at the offending foot. And then, with flashing eye and teeth a-gleam, the stowaway "lep" into the aisle, for one brief moment struck a tragic attitude and then—scurried. Meanwhile the passengers were moved—most of them to the top of the seats.

"My Gawd," screamed the woman, who had been the shelter house for the rat. "Look-a there." She mounted the seat pointing in terror. Her skirts were held high. Every one followed her example—only there were some who didn't hold their skirts high. These—the men—with rare presence of mind, shouted to the conductor and made ineffectual attempts to boot the pestered animal as it dashed bewildered here and there in search of another friendly petticoat.

One bell jangled in the motorman's cage and the car came to a sudden halt for the final scene. Hysterics were rife and every skirt in the car was wildly shaken—for the rat had disappeared. A nice big hole, which loomed like the gates of Paradise to the pursued one, offered advantages too alluring to be resisted and through some rat avenue the hero of many hair-breadth 'scapes leisurely disembarked—no one knows where—and courage and skirts were restored within the car.

Canary Whistles Tunes.

Norwalk, O.—Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Burgess, of Garden street, this city, own probably the only canary bird in the country that whistles tunes as well as sings. The bird is about a year old. It came into the possession of the Burgess family soon after it was hatched. The bird often heard Mr. and Mrs. Burgess whistle to summon their pet dog, and the bird soon began to whistle. While engaged in her household duties, Mrs. Burgess would whistle some tune, and it was not long before the canary bird began to imitate her. Now the bird whistles nearly all of "Nearer My God to Thee," "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and "There's Only One Girl in This World for Me."

Dog and Pig Are Chums.

Bellefontaine, O.—At the home of Amos Braden, a little pig that was discarded by its mother, has taken up with the big shepherd dog on the farm, and it chums around and nestles up to the dog and seems perfectly content in his company, and the dog exercises a very friendly sovereignty over the castoff.

Kitten Has Long Ride on Engine.

Altoona, Pa.—The pet kitten of the employes of the Harrisburg roundhouse rode to Altoona over the Pennsylvania the other day on the driver brakes cylinder pads of the locomotive hauling the Pittsburg express. It was found when the engine was run into the Altoona roundhouse, and inquiry soon found its owners.

The Mystery of Carneycroft

BY JOSEPH BROWN COOKE. COPYRIGHT 1907 BY STORY-PRESS CORPORATION

It was quite evident that it had been passed up through the opening and turned until it lay flat on the grating, the person below doubtless mistaking me for Jenks and misconstruing my efforts to raise the lid into a signal from the stage driver that he had arrived and was awaiting orders. That I did not understand this simple maneuver from the first and appreciate the situation at a glance was because of my highly excited nervous state and my subsequent encounter with Jenks himself.

On my return to the house I found the following telegram which had just arrived:

"Wire received. Will not await letter. Sure to arrive on time.

"CARNEY."

This message was dated New York and, apparently, had been transmitted thence from the cable over the local wire to Carney-Croft. It must have been in response to my dispatch of the previous day and served to set my mind at rest as to the whereabouts and purposes of John Carney, which had been troubling me in an indefinite way for some time past.

The only thing now left for me to do seemed to be to remain virtually passive until he arrived, keeping a sharp watch on things, but taking no positive steps in his absence unless unforeseen circumstances arose to call for immediate action. My chief desire was to see Miss Carney and make clear to her my feelings, but this seemed to be out of the question, as she remained consantly with Miss Weston and no longer came to any meals or showed herself about the house.

The country was fast taking on the mantle of white under which it was to sleep for so many long weeks, and it was with a comfortable shiver that I entered the library, just before luncheon, and strode up to the fire to warm my hands and toast my shins and back successively.

I found Miss Weston's physician similarly engaged and asked him solicitously concerning his patient.

His face clouded and I even thought I saw a tear in the corner of his eye, for, like all doctors with the right kind of stuff in them, familiarity with human suffering had only warmed his heart and softened his nature.

"I had hoped," he continued, "that young Carney's return would have a good effect on her, but when we told her of the message that came this morning she only drew the sheets over her face and broke down completely. There is something more to this, Mr. Ware, than the mere absence of her sweetheart, but what it is I cannot even imagine."

"Then you know nothing of the mystery of Carney-Croft?" I asked cautiously, closing the door and speaking in a lown tone.

"The mystery of Carney-Croft!" he exclaimed in bewildered surprise and then his face relaxed and he smiled pleasantly as he said: "Oh! you mean the ghost stories that were told about here after Mr. Carney died?"

"Well," I returned, "ghosts or something of the sort were really seen about the place, were they not?"

His smile broadened as he replied:

"Oh, yes, some of the boys did rig themselves up in sheets and play spook for a time, until I took a hand in it myself and drove them out. I was going to send you word about it, but I found it was only a lot of boyish pranks, and that they hadn't done any harm beyond getting into the old tunnel by the river, and, of course, that didn't amount to anything."

"The old tunnel!" I exclaimed in well-feigned surprise. "Is there a tunnel by the river?"

"You never heard of it, of course," he went on, "and I fancy nearly everyone has forgotten it by this time. When Mr. Carney began to build here he located his house some 200 yards farther down the hill toward the water. He had a plan of running a little tunnel from the cellar to the river so that ashes and other refuse from the house could be taken out that way and not clutter up the lawns or be seen from the windows.

"Just as this work was partially completed the old dam, some two miles up the stream, was demolished and a new one built about a mile below. This raised the water level until the far end of his tunnel was completely submerged and so he gave up the scheme entirely and began a new cellar quite a distance back from the first. The partly finished tunnel and the excavation for the original cellar were covered over and had practically been forgotten by everybody except the boys, who used to dive down and swim into the hole in the summer.

"Then, as I say, they got the idea of playing ghost and would run down the hill in the moonlight with nothing on but a sheet or a piece of old fish net which waved out far out behind them. When they got to the edge of the bank they would emit some sort of a ghostly yell and dive down out of sight. Finally, when all the young girls in the neighborhood began to get hysterics, I discovered what was going on and put a stop to it by giving two or three of the ringleaders a sound thrashing and installing a family of beavers in the tunnel who vigorously attacked all future intruders."

The doctor laughed heartily as he finished his little tale and concluded by saying:

"There have been occasional rumors of ghost since then, I know, but I fancy that is the biggest mystery Carney-Croft ever had."

"Doctor," I returned seriously, "there is a far greater mystery than that going on here this very minute. That tunnel is again occupied, by whom I do not know, but the man or men who are down there are in league with that Bruce woman who lives in the new cottage, and with Jenks, the stage driver. Moreover, these people are connected in some inexplicable way with Miss Weston, and the Bruce woman, who seems to be the head and front of the whole thing, has written letters to Miss Weston, and even to me, most of which contain vague references to Miss Carney and threats that—"

"The Bruce woman written to you!" exclaimed the doctor. "Why, my dear sir, it is impossible! I have known the woman for a dozen years and she cannot read a word or write a letter!"

At that moment he was summoned hurriedly to Miss Weston's room and I was handed a telegram from MacArdel which read:

"Keep away from that hole and do nothing till you get my letter. Your life may depend on it. Wire if you wish me to come."

The messenger was waiting and, with no thought of the letter to which he referred, but only to hasten the time when some one would be with me to whom I could talk, I replied with the single word, "Come."

Dammers EYESIGHT SPECIALIST

ONE DAY ONLY

Parlors of Kensington Hotel, Plainfield,

Wednesday, June 12,

HOURS—9.00 a. m. until 4.00 p. m.

Your eyes will be examined by THE DAMMERS SCIENTIFIC METHOD, Positively the only absolutely correct way to fit glasses. CONSULTATION FREE.

(NO DROPS USED.) Those who have been examined for GLASSES by men who claim to examine eyes by the old, incorrect way, which is done by everyone who supplies glasses but us, will be agreeably surprised by our scientific and wonderful methods of fitting glasses.

We correct your eye defects by looking in the eyes, taking the exact scientific measurements of the focus and shape of the eyes.

NO QUESTIONS ASKED, no trying glasses on your face, until we have determined your exact optical error.

The old tedious, and tiresome way of trying to fit glasses is either putting drops in the eyes, which often causes BLINDNESS, or by trying on a lot of glasses, and asking you "Can you see these letters?" or "Do these glasses make you see better?"

After your Optician does a lot of guessing, and has your eyes all out of shape, you think you have been examined.

Think this over, and you can readily see that you have been doing your own examining, and that is no doubt the reason you have had trouble to get glasses correct.

THIS IS ABSOLUTELY THE HIGHEST CLASS WORK DONE IN FITTING GLASSES IN AMERICA.—DON'T SUFFER WITH HEADACHE.

We have produced astonishing results from brain fag, nervous debility, insomnia, dizziness, nausea, WATERY EYES, blurry vision, and other troubles caused by EYE STRAIN. We have corrected by the use of glasses cross eyes and Astigmatism by our scientific methods.

Our position in Newark, N. J., and Providence, R. I., as the LEADING OPTICAL EXPERTS is proof of the high confidence in our responsibility, and the reliability of our representations.

FINE VAUDEVILLE BILL.

Acts Presented at the New Plainfield Theatre Please the Audience.

Headed by Bedini and Arthur, the world-famous jugglers who have just returned from Europe, Manager Counihan's big vaudeville bill was opened at the New Plainfield theatre last night. There were eight numbers and all were up to a standard of excellence seldom seen in this city. Miss May Ward and her Dresden "dolls" divided honors with Bedini and Arthur and is sure to be a big favorite during the remainder of the week. The performances will not be given this afternoon or tonight because of "The Peasant Prince" but will be resumed tomorrow afternoon.

At 4 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, Arthur Bedini, who is an artist of the first water, will catch a turnip thrown from one of the highest buildings in the city, on a fork held in his mouth. This is a trick he holds a world's record for. Thursday afternoon, two baseball teams composed of members of the vaudeville troupe and attaches of the theatre, will have a game on Crescent Oval.

Wholesale Auto Arrests.

Metuchen officials have started a crusade against the reckless automobile drivers passing through that town. There were thirty-nine arrests Saturday and Sunday and $440 in fines collected. Twenty of the arrests were made on Saturday, and practically all of them were made by Borough Marshal Fourat. Judge Weber imposed fines ranging from $1 and costs to as high as $4.85. The crusade has made all sorts of trouble for autoists and many threaten to cut Metuchen out of their future trips. Mayor McClellan and party were among those held up, the chauffeur being fined $13.95. Out of the amount collected in fines, the State receives $285.59 and the balance is divided between the four marshals and the Recorder.

"The report that I did the steamfitting in the home of State Architect Frank H. Bent, of Bound Brook, free, is false. My books show that Mr. Bent paid over $300 for the work."

Asked about his birthday dinner at a Highstown hostelry last Tuesday, Mr. Tobin averred that it could hardly be dignified with such an elaborate title as that the reporter had given it.

It has been alleged that the "dinner" was a sort of expression of Mr. Tobin's appreciation of favors past. It has been stated in the columns of a newspaper that several of the guests had to be taken home on shutters and that others were forced to put up at the hotel for the night, leaving the impression that they were gloriously or ingloriously intoxicated. The name of United States Senator Frank O. Briggs has been given among the guests. David Baird was boomed as a candidate for Governor at the same function.

"There were twenty-eight of us at the luncheon, for luncheon it was. It occurred in the middle of the day and, so far as I know, there was not a man who was under the influence of liquor. The statement that any of the guests had to be taken home on shutters is untrue."

"Was it your thirty-fifth birthday?"

"Yes, I had asked a number of my friends to join me in a luncheon, and they ran down to the hotel in their cars. In several cases they had asked friends of theirs, whom I had never met. They came to me and asked if it would be agreeable for them to ask their guests to stay, and I assured them that it would.

"My particular guests at the luncheon were two men who are connected with the Iowa Central, and one with the Northwestern Central. Senator Briggs was positively not one of the twenty-eight, and the only official who has been interested in the work I have been doing for the State was State Comptroller J. Willard Morgan. Mr. Lawton was a guest."

Asked about the Baird boom for Governor, Mr. Tobin said that he did not recall the name of the South Jersey man who had sprung it.

"It was more of a joke than anything else,' he went on. "As I understand it, Mr. Baird does not want the nomination, and would not consider it if seriously put in the race. The man who mentioned his name was a guest of one of my friends. He did it in a course of the luncheon, in the same good-natured way that those things usually are done."

JUDGE GARRETSON'S WIDOW DIES OF PNEUMONIA.

Survived Her Husband Only Eight Days—Prominent in Society.

Morristown, June 11.—Mrs. Abram Q. Garretson, widow of Justice Garretson, of the New Jersey Supreme Court, died at her home on Glen road this morning, after an illness of only a few days, of pneumonia.

It is believed that her sickness was superinduced by the shock of the sudden death of her husband on June 2, which was followed by a slight cold, pneumonia developing last Friday.

Mrs. Garretson was a native of Philadelphia, the daughter of Joseph and Mary Boker, of that city.

Mrs. Garretson was prominent in society here and famous for her "Sunnymede," being made bright and hospitable to an unusual degree by many informal functions. She was a member of the New Jersey Society of Colonial Dames and active in many charitable works.

She leaves three children, Joseph B., Josephine B., and Helen, the last named still attending school.

The home of the Garretson family was built by Justice and Mrs. Garretson about twelve years ago. It is commodious, it is in the colonial style of architecture and sets in spacious grounds.

The funeral services will be held Sunday morning, at 9 o'clock, in St. Peter's church.

RUNAWAY THROUGH THRONG.

Owner Holds on to Reins and is Thrown Under Buggy Wheels.

Whitehouse, June 11.—While the congregation of the Methodist church was dispersing after Children's Day exercises Sunday morning, a horse belonging to Frederick Conover became unmanageable as Mr. Conover was about to assist his mother, Mrs. James Conover, into the buggy. Mrs. Conover managed to alight in safety, but her son held on to the reins and was badly cut about the head by being thrown under the wheels.

The horse broke away and darted in and out among over a score of vehicles with occupants, barely missing collision with a number of them. The buggy finally struck a cherry tree beside the road and was torn from the horse, which galloped home with dragging harness. Mr. Conover, with his mother, was later conveyed to his home by friends. He was not dangerously injured.

OBJECTED TO MINUTES.

Mr. Tyler Succeeds In Having Council's Report Changed.

Objecting to the fact that the minutes of the regular June meeting of the Common Council attempted to give a digest of the remarks made by citizens who were present to speak at the public hearing for or against brick pavement for the business section of the city, Mr. Tyler, at the adjourned meeting, last night, finally succeeded in having the expressions erased from the minutes and the mere fact stated that W. R. Codington, J. B. Coward, R. Henry DePew and Dr. A. W. Anderson spoke.

Councilmen Gloak and Frank Randolph could see no reason for changing the minutes as they were written in the customary manner, but Mr. Tyler could see no reason why the minutes should show such an expression of opinion, that no matter how careful the clerk might be in writing the minutes he was quite apt to favor either one side or the other. Fully an hour was consumed in straightening the minutes out to the satisfaction of Mr. Tyler, after which they were approved.

A JUNE HOME WEDDING

Quiet Ceremony Unites Miss May Alice Ross and H. Eugene Davis.

TWO PASTORS OFFICIATE

Young Couple Will Sail for China in the Fall To Engage In Mission Work.

Miss May Alice Ross, daughter of Richard Ross, of Bound Brook, and a member of the Irving Public School teaching corps, and H. Eugene Davis, a graduate of Alfred Theological Seminary, Class '07, were quietly married yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock at the home of the bride's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Spicer, on West Fifth street. Only the relatives and immediate friends to the number of about thirty witnessed the ceremony, which was performed by Rev. George B. Shaw, pastor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, assisted by Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, editor of The Sabbath Recorder.

The bride was gowned in white Benzai silk, trimmed with Irish point lace. She also wore a veil caught up with lilies-of-the-valley and carried a bouquet of roses and lilies-of-the-valley. Her atendants were Miss Ida Spicer, Miss Iola Moore, Miss Mary Alice St. John, Miss Mildred Greene, Miss Ruth Maxson and Miss Ethel Titsworth. They were all gowned in white and held a daisy chain, forming an aisle through which the bride and her father passed on their way to the parlor, where the ceremony was performed. The groom was unattended. The wedding marches were rendered on the piano by Miss Edna Burr. The ushers were Arthur J. Spicer and Dr. Sydney R. Titsworth.

It was a daisy wedding and the parlor was profusely decorated with the flower. The prevailing colors in this room were green and white, while the dining room was in red and the library in pink. The various colors made an effective decoration.

Following the ceremony, an informal reception was held and supper was served, during which the couple was showered with congratulations. The bride was the recipient of a great many gifts of value and use.

Both the bride and groom are graduates of Alfred University, and it was while there that the romance began that ended in their wedding yesterday. After leaving the university Mr. Davis entered the seminary and prepared for a ministerial carere. During his college life he was prominent in athletics and was considered the best football player on the team. Before concluding his studies at the seminary he decided to engage in foreign mission work after his graduation and his bride decided to join him.

They will spend the summer at Battle Creek, Mich., and will sail from San Francisco on September 24 for Shanghai, China. They will be stationed at the Seventh-Day Baptist mission in Lieu-oo, China. During the past year Miss Ross has been teaching in the Irving School. She is a prominent worker in the Seventh-Day Baptist church and all its departments.

DR. LAWRENCE MUNDY WEDS AT NEW BRUNSWICK.

Takes Miss Evelyn Macom, of That City As His Bride—Wedding Trip South.

Miss Evelyn Macom, of New Brunswick, and Dr. Lawrence Mundy, of South Plainfield, formerly of this city, were married at 10.30 o'clock this morning at the bride's home, by Monsignor O'Grady, of St. Peter's church, in the presence of a large gathering of relatives and friends

The bride's attendant was her sister, Miss Dorly Macom, and the best man was Isaac Williamson, of Franklin Park, a college mate of the groom. The bride wore a gown of white net over taffeta and carried white roses. The maid-of-honor was gowned in white baptiste over pink taffeta and carried pink roses.

After the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride and later the couple left for a trip through the South, which will include the Jamestown Exposition. Upon their return they will reside at 116 North Suydam street, New Brunswick. The wedding gifts were numerous and costly. Dr. Mundy is a practicing dentist, having had offices on West Front street before removing them to New Brunswick.

Seven More Indictments.

The Union County Grand Jury returned seven more indictments this morning, being cases of illegal selling of liquor. There was one case in Rahway, two at Mountainside and five in Elizabeth. It is understood that several other indictments on similar charges will be brought in.

NO GRADUATIONS AT SCOTCH PLAINS THIS YEAR

EXERCISES TOMORROW NIGHT MARK COMPLETION OF GRAMMAR COURSE.

Commencement exercises of the Scotch Plains Public School will be held tomorrow night in the Baptist church. The program this year will be somewhat different from previous years, for the reason that there will be no "sweet girl graduates," the graduating class being composed of pupils who have finished the grammar grade and are ready for the course at the Plainfield High School. The senior class this year is composed of Eugene Lidgate, president; Clarma Bettman, John Brick, Tony Di Nitzio, Edward Hatfield, Edward Meyer, William Reynolds, W. Maxwell Saunders, Herbert Spencer, Herbert Terry, Vincent Terry, John Thompson, John Todd, Edward Van Hoesen, Fred Van Hoesen, Alice Terry, secretary; Lena Jahn, treasurer; Maida Brick, Ruth Hatfield, Leora Henry, Edith Jahn, Mae Linden, Nellie Linden, Barbara Miller and Mary Wheeler.

The senior class, which is one of the largest the school has had in years, has adopted blue and gold as its colors. One feature which will be missed Thursday night will be the reception tendered the graduates in the assembly room of the school. However, Principal Daniel T. Hendrickson and the class have arranged an excellent progam, the speaker of the evening being Dr. H. M. Maxson, superintendent of the Plainfield schools. Besides this treat, the following program will be rendered:

Invocation, Rev. William R. Mulford; march, "Under the Double Eagle," Wagner, school orchestra; class history, Miss Lena Jahn; "Enchantment Waltz," Weber, school orchestra; class prophecy, Eugene Lidgate; "The Cyclone March," Weber, school orchestra; address, Dr. Henry M. Maxson, superintendent of Plainfield Public Schools; violin solo, Eugene Lidgate; presentation of diplomas, Dr. F. W. Westcott, president Board of Education; class song, class; benediction, Rev. T. Moore-Smith.

The school year about to close has been a most successful one, the enrollment, notwithstanding the fact that the higher grade pupils go to Plainfield, has been the largest in the history of the school. The work has been successful and Principal Hendrickson and his corps of teachers are to be congratulated for the excellent showing made. The teachers are Miss Agnes Hogan, Miss Mary Egan, Miss Harriett M. Squiers, Miss Harriett Halliday, Miss Josephine Ingram. With the exception of the latter, all will be identified with the school during the coming year. Miss Ingram has decided to take a position as teacher in one of the Trenton schools, which is her home town. She has been identified with the school work for two years, is an able teacher and has made many friends during that time.

A. WILLIS WEST MARRIES.

His bride, Miss Helen Van de Carr, of Stockport, N. Y.

A. Willis West, of this city, and Miss Helen M. Van de Carr, of Stockport, N. Y., were married Saturday afternoon at the home of the bride's aunt, Mrs. Lewis, 125 Hicks street, Brooklyn. Rev. Dr. Silverman, of the Episcopal church, Stockport, performed the ceremony. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Van de Carr, as maid-of-honor, and George S. Ring, of this city, was best man.

Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. George S. Ring, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Laurens H. Van Buren, Miss Margaret Goddard, Miss Cornelia Hyatt, Charles Barlow and Lewis Williams. After a bridal tour, the couple will reside in this city. Mr. West is associated with the New York banking house of H. L. Crawford.

Cemetery Association Elects.

The annual meeting of the Hillside Cemetery Association was held last night at the undertaking offices of A. M. Runyon & Son, on Park avenue, when these officers were re-elected: President, Mason W. Tyler; vice president, Orville T. Waring; secretary and treasurer, Alexander Gilbert. These officers also constitute the executive committee. The question of extending the city water system through the cemetery grounds was discussed and referred to the executive committee.

Died as Result of Dog Bite.

Superintendent Charles E. Ball, of the local office of the Prudential Insurance Company, received a telegram today informing him of the death of E. E. Riddle, the Prudential Insurance Company agent at Junction, Hunterdon county, this morning. Death was the result of the bite of a dog two weeks ago while Mr. Riddle was making collections. The wound was closed up and blood poisoning resulted.

MORE TROUBLE AHEAD FOR SPEEDING AUTOISTS

SOMERVILLE BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS NOW AFTER BIG TOURING CARS.

The Somerville Board of Commissioners has now taken a hand in the effort to stop the automobilists from Bernardsville and Morristown, who pass through Somerville on their way to the big athletic events at Princeton, from speeding through the town. Last Saturday the residents of Cliff street assert that five automobilists abreast raced down that thoroughfare totally disregarding the speed limit. Pedestrians, bicyclists and carriage drivers were obliged to turn to other streets to avoid being run down.

At the last meeting of the board a resolution was passed providing for the posting on all roads running into Somerville placards warning auto drivers to beware how they run their machines through town, or they will be promptly arrested and fined under the regulations of the town ordinance.

The policemen of the place have been ordered to keep a strict watch for offenders and arrest them for the least infraction of the law regarding speeding on the streets.

FAILURE A RELIEF TO THE MILLIKEN BROS.

BANKRUPTCY ENABLES CONCERN TO COMPLETE CONTRACTS.

One of the peculiar results of the failure of Milliken Bros., the big steel firm built by former Plainfielders, according to lawyers connected with the case, is that being bankrupt, the concern will now be able to go ahead with its business with a free and easy hand regardless of the money famine. The reason is this: Milliken Bros. was hampered with debts amounting to $6,500,000. It has contracts for the erection of steel buildings in all parts of the world. Money is constantly coming in for the work that is being done, but the receivers will not have to pay out at present anything on old debts. In other words, bankruptcy will give the concern a chance to build up an adequate working capital irrespective of the money market stringency. Its contracts promise a profit for the present year of from $1,250,000 to $1,500,000. It is expected that in four or six months the corporation will have worked its way free of the present money tangle and be in shape to pass out of bankruptcy.

Three receivers were appointed yesterday by United States Judge Holt—Congressman J. Van Vechten Olcott, August Heckscher and William L. Ward. Mr. Heckscher was nominated by Henry Wollman, counsel for the bondholders; Mr. Ward by William N. Cromwell, counsel for Milliken Bros., and Mr. Olcott by the Court. Mr. Heckscher and Mr. Ward are practical steel men, with large business interests of their own, and Mr. Olcott is a lawyer. The three receivers gave a bond for $500,000, guaranteed by the Fidelity and Casualty Company, of Maryland. They were empowered to borrow $200,000, but it was said there would probably be little need of contracting such a loan.

The debts of the company are: Twenty-year bonds, $3,000,000; loans due banks, $1,350,000; loans due E. F. Milliken and Manning, $1,050,000; amounts due three hundred firms, $1,100,000. This total of $6,500,000, it is said, is more than offset by the plant on Staten Island alone, which, with the land, is valued at $7,500,000. The concern has large supplies of material on hand, profits due it of $700,000 on completed contracts, and prospective profits on uncompleted contracts of about $1,500,000.

Funeral of David Lowrie.

The funeral service of David B. Lowrie was held yesterday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the late residence on Clinton avenue. There was a large attendance of relatives and friends, including a number from Dunellen the former residence of Mr. Lowrie. The service was conducted by Rev. Mr. Casselberry, pastor of the Presbyterian church, Dunellen, of which Mr. Lowrie was a member. There were many floral tributes from relatives and friends.

He will be a guest at luncheon at the Essex County Country Club at Hutton Park. In the evening, as the special guest of the East Orange Democratic Club, at a dinner. Gov. Stokes and other prominent men will attend the dinner.

SHED "CROCODILE" TEARS

Hummell Says Vail Made Big Ado After Starting Blaze in Building.

HIS STORY UNSHAKEN

Holds to His Despicable Testimony With Orchard-Like Tenacity Under Cross-Examination.

Joseph S. Hummell, formerly mail carrier and assistant to Charles T. Vail, until recently postmaster of West Portal, and who turned State's evidence on the witness stand at Flemington, Monday, was under a severe cross-examination during yesterday's court session and proved a remarkable witness. He said he had poured kerosene oil upon the floor back of the counters on Thursday previous to the fire because Vail told him it was a good idea. The Postmaster, Hummell said, unfastened the postoffice cabinet on Thursday or Friday, he was not sure which.

Vail occasionally smiled while Hummell related his actions under the alleged instructions of the postmaster. The witness said Vail told him to make a big ado during the fire, and he did as he was directed. He wrung his hands, tore his gloves and shed "crocodile tears" and cut up other antics, Hummell said. At this juncture the court had to rap repeatedly for order.

Hummell said he first met Miss Gillen, of Plainfield, on the day previous to the fire and consented to work for her, at Vail's request, for $20 a month. Harry K. Stevens, who said he had acted as an auctioneer on five or six occasions, testified he sold the property to Miss Gillen for $6,050. At Vail's request he started it himself at $4,500, and with one exception bid alternately with her until the required amount was reached.

Senator Gebhardt, Vail's counsel, put Hummell through a rigid cross-examination, but Senator Gebhardt only succeeded in showing the witness to be one of the coolest, self-composed witnesses that has been on the witness stand in the Flemington Court in a long time. He seems to be neither ashamed or proud of admitting that he is a drunkard, a liar, a perjurer, an incendiary. He admits them all in the calmest and simplest manner and his only excuse is that he has been under the influence of Charles T. Vail, and that his influence has dominated him in all his evil actions.

It is thought the case will be ended today and the jury retired for deliberation.

TIMBO SOCIAL CLUB IS GOING TO ATLANTIC CITY

AND DOESEN'T CARE WHO KNOWS IT: DOPE ON THE TRIP.

What the members of the club say will be "the biggest outing ever" is to be held by the Timbo Social Club on Sunday. A special train is to carry the club and its guests to Atlantic City, where they will burn up the boardwalk and punch holes in the ocean until all records are broken. Storm signals are being run up all along the coast, and quotations on red paint have started to rise.

It will be the fourth annual outing, and the fifth will have to hump itself to make a name. The first-second and third will be faded to nothing. The train, consisting of five cars and something to make them move, will be a solid vestibule creation, with all the latest wrinkles in rolling stock. It will start from North Avenue station at 7:30 o'clock in the morning, and skid to the shore in three hours. It will make only one stop on the way, at Elizabeth. The return trip will not start until 10 o'clock at night.

There will be a car for refreshments, a car for singers, a car for sleepers, and a car for the old men who prefer to read the newspapers. Politicians and knockers will be locked in the fifth car, which is to be a padded cell on wheels. Arrangements are bing made to have it cut off on some high bridge and wrecked.

Graduate Gives Luncheon.

Miss Eudora Sullivant, one of the graduates from the Plainfield Seminary, gave a charming luncheon yesterday following the commencement exercises, in honor of her classmates. Covers were laid for five. The prevailing color was red.

Fined for Drunkenness.

Charles Leonard, arrested on Field avenue yesterday for drunkenness, was fined $5 by City Judge Runyon this morning.

GEORGE SHRAGER PLACED IN HIS FATHER'S CUSTODY

PROSECUTOR THUS ENDS THE CASE AGAINST ALLEGED SLONIN ROBBER.

George Shrager, who has been held in the Union County Jail for several months, on the suspicion of being the person who held up and robbed Leo Slonim, the West Front street jeweler, on the night of December 3, last, was arraigned in the county court this morning and entered a plea of non vult. There not being sufficient evidence against the prisoner to prove a case, he was turned over to the custody of his father, who recently came on from the West to look after his son's interest.

Young Shrager, who was represented by S. S. Swackhamer, and the prosecutor held a conference and agreed to a termination of the case. The county's officials thoroughly investigated the circumstances and decided that the prisoner could not have been in Plainfield the night the robbery was committed and there was practically nothing else to do but release him.

SWIFT DISPOSAL OF WARDEN DODD'S ASSAILANT

MAN WHO ATTACKED HIM MONDAY SENTENCED TO THREE YEARS.

Charles Sherman, of Elizabeth, who was serving time in the Union County Jail for stealing a watch, and who assaulted Warden Charles Dodd, Monday morning, was arraigned in the county court this morning and sentenced to three years in State Prison.

The assault was provoked because Warden Dodd called Sherman down for not keeping himself and his cell clean. It was right after breakfast Monday morning and he attacked the warden with a wash stick, while his back was turned. Mr. Dodd was considerably cut about the head, one wound requiring five stitches to close it, while he was also bruised about the face.

SOMERSET FREEHOLDERS HOLD REGULAR MEETING.

Bridge and Road Matters the Main Business to Come Before the Members.

Except the passing of bills for payment there was very little done at the Somerset County Board of Chosen Freeholders in the court room at Somerville yesterday. Member Joel Codington, of Warren township, was the only one absent.

So many complaints have been made about the condition of the iron bridge at Bound Brook, the matter of a new structure was discussed to some length. County Engineer Doughty made a verbal report of his investigation of the structure. It was moved that a committee be appointed, together with the engineer, for the purpose of examining the bridge, with a view of ascertaining the expediency of building a new one, and to get, approximately, the cost of a bridge, and to report to the Board at its next regular meeting. Director Baird appointed Thomas E. Gibson, Peter H. Smith and Joseph Fitzga as members of the committee, with engineer Doughty.

A communication was received from the State Commissioner of Roads in relation to the repair of county roads in Somerset. The letter was read and ordered placed on file. It is understood that the Commissioner wants the roads already improved repaired before he grants permission to build any more roads.

Garret Durling, of Montgomery township was on hand with a grievance. He complained that at the time the Rocky Hill road was constructed about 400 yards of earth were dumped on his property and he wants the county to stand for the cost of removing the same. No action was taken in the matter

The Board will meet at Bernardsville next Wednesday, at 11 a. m.

PLUMBER TOBIN DEFIES THE STATE INVESTIGATORS

DUNELLEN'S MAYOR TO WAR ON GAMBLING

WILL APPOINT DEPUTIES FOR SABBATH PICKET DUTY IF NECESSARY.

Mayor William Wyckoff is determined to put an end to Sunday gambling, which has been carried on at Dunellen in the past, principally by non-residents. Every summer season Dunellen and New Market have been the rendezvous for poker players and crap shooters, who gather on the outskirts in sequestered spots and spend the Sabbath in gambling.

Mayor Wyckoff has an able lieutenant in Justice of the Peace R. P. F. Von Minden, and last Sunday the two officials inaugurated their crusade with good results. Accompanied by Detectives Mohan and Starker a crowd which numbered nearly a hundred was dispersed from a strip of woodland at the foot of South avenue, near the Dunellen-New Market line. About twenty of the gang were captured, but they were allowed to go after promising to keep away from the place on Sundays.

Justice Von Minden, the Mayor said, was determined to rid New Market of the same plague, and both had agreed to work together in an effort to accomplish the task.

"Dunellen has been laughed at by outsiders as being a little Sunday Monte Carlo," declared the mayor yesterday, "but while I am Chief Magistrate of the borough, I am going to see that the laws are rigidly enforced on Sundays, and that the undesirable element from other towns are kept away. If it is necessary I will appoint deputies and assign them to picket duty on the Sabbath. Dunellen is a Christian community, and I will not permit hoodlums to come here and tarnish the town's fair name."

COULDN'T CARRY CONTRIBUTION

Coins Given to Y. M. C. A. Dormitory Fund Made a Heavy Total.

The contribution made by the Women's Auxiliary to the Y. M. C. A. dormitory fund, at the meeting of the organization Monday was substantiated in more ways than one. The money was turned over in pennies, the scheme for collection being to have all the members paste fifty pennies on a strip of surgeon's plaster, making a "yard of pennies."

There was over $70 in the total. Mrs. Harry C. Runyon, the treasurer, had to hire a man to carry the pennies home for her. Mrs. Runyon thought, when she started for the Y. M. C. A., that a small satchel would be big enough to carry all the money. She found a dress-suit case necessary, and couldn't lift it after the coins were placed in it.

All of the social functions of commencement have been cancelled, including the annual senior ball, which was to follow the president's reception tonight.

Refuses to Show His Books and is Threatened With Arrest Unless He Does.

PROBE DRAWS BLOOD

Contractor Lawton Asserts He Burned His Accounts and Papers the First of the Year.

Probing by the Assembly investigating committee late yesterday afternoon unearthed sensational developments in the matter of State House contracts, Lewis Lawton, the Trenton contractor, and George J. Tobin, the Plainfield plumber, contributing by their testimony to the expose, and the former's bookkeeper telling of alterations of certain of her employer's accounts.

While Lawton testified that such of his books as John H. Backes, counsel for the inquisitors, adverted to had been destroyed, Tobin refused to produce the records of his business dealings at issue and to answer certain questions relating thereto. Tobin took this position, he said, on the advice of friends, whose identity he also refused to disclose.

This evidence followed closely upon the admission, at the morning session of the inquisition, that many contracts had been let to Lawton without competition. It was shown that the Trenton contractor in this way obtained work for the State for which his bills approximated $12,000.

Lawton was the first witness to go on the stand yesterday and Mr. Backes immediately started asking questions about the "no-competition" contracts. He could not tell how he happened to give $12,000 extra to Tobin. He produced what he said were copies of some of his books after he had been called to order for delay in appearing. Mr. Backes evidently did not believe the books had been destroyed months ago. He thought the witness had been bluffing or had got rid of damaging evidence very quickly. Lawton admitted he had received $301,233, directly or indirectly, from the State since 1901, but said all the books containing the transactions in detail had been burned by himself at his house. He said he burned them because he had no further use for them. He had some very sharp words with Mr. Backes. When hard pressed he acknowledged that he settled his balance with Tobin on January 1 for about $21,000. He did not remember whether the settlement was a verbal one or in writing. In case of a suit, perhaps the books which he had destroyed would have been valuable, but he had not thought so before.

Miss May S. Beck, his bookkeeper, who has been employed in Lawton's office for five years, swore that the books had been destroyed, because she so understood from Lawton, and she had not seen them for some time. On cross-examination, however, she got so mixed up as to when she had seen the books last that Mr. Backes ordered her to appear again this morning and produce some additional documents that might clear the situation.

George J. Tobin, of this city, was next called to the stand and was very defiant from the start. He said he had been in th plumbing business nineteen years and had been doing work in Trenton since 1903. Mr. Backes asked for his books. Mr. Tobin replied that he had not brought them.

"Why not?" asked counsel.

Mr. Tobin explained that there were some seven or eight hundred accounts in his books, and he did not deem it proper to produce them before the committee.

Mr. Backes in severe tones reminded Tobin that he was under subpoena and said the books must be forthcoming.

Tobin—I refuse to produce them.

Backes—Why, are yyou afraid they will incriminate you?

Tobin—No sir. I am willing for the committee to see them, but I don't want my private accounts thrown open to the public.

At this juncture Mr. Backes turned to the committee and said it was up to them to act on the refusal of Tobin to produce his books. Committeeman Barber objected to any summary proceedings against Tobin. Mr. Backes replied:

"I don't care whether you object or not, the majority rules in this matter." Then there was a short conference in reference to the refus-

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

DIAMOND DUST.

In defeating Bound Brook last Saturday, Shotch Plains retains second place in the Inter-City Amateur League. The contest was a good one from start to finish, the Plains team winning by a score of 5 to 2. The game to be played at the Plains Saturday with the Y. M. C. A. aggregation will be a good test of the relative merits of the two nines.

William S. Conlon, '08, of Oswego, has been elected captain of the Colgate baseball team for next season, the athletic advisory board of Colgate University having voted to allow the members of the team to play summer baseball.

As yet "Phil" Smith has not had an opportunity to show his ability in the box for the Newark Eastern League team, but Manager Burnham will probably give him a chance soon.

Doyle, the Highlander's pitcher, seems to have struck a winning pace. On Monday he defeated Detroit by a score of 9 to 3.

"Cy" Young, of Boston, met his match on Monday, when Cleveland gave his team a whitewash, 5 to 0.

The Trolley-Dodgers from Brooklyn are slowly but surely climbing the ladder. Who knows but that they may yet fight it out with Chicago for first place.

Jimmy Collins and Oldring, of the Philadelphia Athletics, still continue to get in a few hits in every game, and their fielding is very fast.

The fans will see a good game at Crescent Oval Saturday, when the Clinton Avenues will cross bats with the Raritans, of Perth Amboy. The latter team is a strong one and will make the locals hustle to win.

Minford has recovered from his illness and will be in first class condition to pitch for Y. M. C. A. at Scotch Plains, Saturday.

Gilman, of the Clinton Avenues, is gradually regaining his batting eye, and is making many a timely hit.

Brit. Martin and his brother, Jack Martin, showed up in old-time form last Saturday against Dunellen. Their work was sensational.

GOLF.

"Marty" O'Loughlin and Morris J. Dumont will play a return match with Conway, the professional, and Joseph Sherman, of the Westfield Golf Club, at the Cranford Golf Club.

Last Saturday's competitions at the Park Golf Club showed that the game is exceedingly popular with the local clergymen. Three of them, the Rev. Dr. H. K. Carroll, Rev. J. O. McKelvey and Rev. C. L. Goodrich, each won points in the weekly contests, and their scores were good ones, too.

Walter McNaughton, who has always been a good athlete, is now devoting his spare time to golf. He plays on the Park Golf Club course, and is improving his game every week.

The Golf Committee of the Plainfield Country Club did a wise thing by establishing two classes, A and B, for good players and those who are not so expert. It affords an incentive for the Class B players to improve their game and get in Class A and it is also a help to the committee in adjusting the handicaps from time to time, thereby simplifying matters greatly.

The New Jersey State Golf Championship, played at Baltusrol last week was a great success, attracting an unusually large field. The championship was won by Jerome D. Travers, whom the local golfers hoped to see on the links of the Plainfield Country Club Saturday, but who will play elsewhere.

All players in the Metropolitan Golf Asspciation are invited to the one-day handicap tournament of the Plainfield Country Club on Saturday. They may start without formal entry if rated in the Metropolitan Golf Association handicap list. Lacking a rating, a player must present a letter from his club's secretary stating how many strokes he gets from some player on the Metropolitan Golf Association's list. The club offers six cups, three as gross and three as net score prizes, but to encourage visitors the conditions provide that no Plainfield member can take either of the two best cups. Eighteen holes will be played, and the competitors may start at any time between noon and 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The tournament is somewhat on the style of those held by the Women's Metropolitan Golf Association, and it is the first one-day open competition for men in the local district for several years. Players who are expected from outside clubs include Walter J. Travis, F. S. Douglas, Archie Graham, Max Behr, Marshall Whitlatch, Oswald Kirkby, H. J. Gee and John, Jr., and Archie Reid, while C. B. Macdonal, H. J. Whigham and George T. Brokaw may also start.

TOBIN DEFIES INVESTIGATORS

al of Tobin to produce the books.

Q. (By Mr. Barber)—Is there any circumstances under which you would produce your books? A. Yes; if only this committee and not the public were present, and if the committee would gharantee that my private accounts would not be thrown open.

Mr. Sullivan—We will not guarantee anything. You are subpoenaed to bring your books and you should have them here. This is a State investigation and we will not delve into any private affairs.

Mr. Tobin said he had only gotten his subpoena at 10:30 Monday; that his books were very heavy, and that it had been impossible to get them to Trenton "today."

Mr. Backes—Have you been advised not to produce your books?

Tobin—In an direct way.

Backes—Yes; by counsel?

Tobin—No, not by my counsel.

Mr. Backes insisted on the witness stating who had advised him.

Tobin—Am I obliged to answer that question?

Mr. Sullivan—You are.

Witness said several friends had advised him not to produce them.

Mr. Sullivan—Who were they?

Tobin—I don't care to answer.

Mr. Sullivan—Then you refuse to answer?

Tobin—No, I don't refuse.

Mr. Sullivan then directed him to answer and Counsel Backes insisted on a reply. Mr. Tobin hesitated, and then said he would rather not give an answer.

Mr. Backes—Was it a State official, or anyone connected with State affairs? A.—No, sir, it was not.

Q.—Are you afraid you would incriminate yourself or your friends by answering?. A.—No, sir.

Continuing, Tobin testified that he had been advised before he had been subpoenaed, or before he had knowledge that he was to be subpoenaed. Mr. Backes then wanted to know how Tobin's friend came to advise him. Tobin's reply was that he went to his friend and said:

"Under certain conditions, what would you do?" and that his friend's reply was: "I would keep my books in my office."

Testifying further, Mr. Tobin said the friend in question was no one in Trenton, but lives in Plainfield. Mr. Backes asked:

"Was it not somebody that is now within the hearing of my voice?"

"No, sir," was the reply.

Counsel now showed up some of the work Tobin had done for the State. He referred to the twenty-eight closets put in the Capitol, at a cost of $1,991, and to the plumbing for Governor Murphy's bathroom, which cost $1,341.68.

Tobin said he was low man in bidding on these jobs and got the work. He insisted that a complete record for all his work for the State would be found in his books at Plainfield.

Mr. Backes again referred to the fact that Tobin had refused to produce his books. Witness said he had explained that matter and suggested that the committee go to his office and examine his records. Mr. Backes here commented:

"If we did that we might be hampered."

Mr. Tobin's reply was: "I guarantee that you will not."

Mr. Sullivan now said, menacingly: "The Legislature is bigger than any individual." He told Tobin that if he had been subpoenaed in any court he would have had to produce his books, even though it required a dray to carry them.

At this point Mr. Backes brought out the fact that Tobin had all the plumbing contracts on State work since his first job, in 1903.

Q.—What has been the secret of your success? A.—I will answer, no matter who it hurts.

Q.—Will your answer, if truthfully given, hurt anyone? A.—No, sir.

After delving further into Tobin's various contracts with the State under Lawton & Son, Mr. Backes directed Tobin to return at 10:30 this morning. As Tobin turned to leave the room, Mr. Sullivan said:

"You realize you must bring your books?"

Tobin turned about, but waited hesitatingly without giving a reply, until Mr. Sullivan repeated:

"Do you understand?"

Tobin replied, "I distinctly heard what Mr. Backes said."

Tobin again started to leave the room, when Mr. Sullivan called to him, "Will you bring your books?"

Tobin returned no answer to this. At this point Mr. Backes jumped to his feet and hastily called for Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms Fletcher, and gave him a new subpoena, with directions to serve it immediately upon the witness.

"Stenographer make a note of the proceedings," said Mr. Backes.

Fletcher proceed to carry out Mr. Backes' directions, but while going through the formality of reading the original writ he became confused and Sergeant-at-Arms Hague came to his rescue and proceeded to read the writ. He, too, hesitated, for the reason that Mr. Backes' writing had become blotted during the hurry in preparing the writ.

Even after the new subpoena had been served upon him, Tobin left the State House without stating whether or not he would produce his books this morning.

It is said that Tobin consulted counsel last night, and if he is arrested he will have a writ of habeas corpus issued and have the whole matter brought before the grand jury of Mercer county, submitting to a trial for misdemeanor. The general belief is, however, that some arrangement will be made by which Tobin will produce those portions of his books that refer to his transactions with the State and Lawton, regardless who may be affected.

Standard Stakes Well Run.

New York, June 12.—Metropolitan racegoers to the number of 10,000 witnessed one of the best turf contests the season has afforded in the sixth renewal of the Standard Stakes, at Gravesend yesterday. Brilliant weather and a fast track made ideal conditions for a race like the Standard, and it is doubtful if any previous program of the season with the exception of the elaborate affairs arranged on public holidays or Saturdays, has succeeded in arousing more genuine interest than that of yesterday, due entirely to the one fixture that was down for decision. The Standard originally engaged eight of its forty-one eligibles, but it was conceded to lie between Peter Pan, Electioneer, Arcit and Flip Flap. When the blue pencil removed the names of Go Between, Tangle, Blandy and Arcite the only disappointment felt had to do with the Western three-year-old, which has not yet had a chance to show Easterners just how good he is. With a glamour of his Belmont Stakes victory still about him, Peter Pan was a very strong public choice, but Flip Flap and Electioneer were well played. The race was a thriller from start to finish and the final drive of the kind that brings a crowd to its feet with roars of encouragement for the contendors. On his way to the post Electioneer, which was making his appearance under silks as a three-year-old, was subjected to closest scrutiny, and the general opinion was that, although he had developed into a flawless three-year-old, a race under his belt would make him more formidable in company with seasoned horses.

Nearly Hit by Heavy Bell.

Rahway, June 12.—Daniel F Hetfield and Henry Kip Woodruff, firemen, had a narrow escape from a serious accident, and possibly death, here Monday. The funeral of John Kennedy, a fireman, was about to start from the house, nearby, and the men went to the engine company's quarters to toll the bell. The door was locked, but forcing an entrance they climbed the narrow stairway into the cupola. Just as they had squeezed into the space where the bell was hanging some one from below gave the rope a pull, completely over turning the bell. As it come down the heavy edge passed within four inches of the men's heads.

Damages for Bridge Crush.

New York, June 12.—Of great interest to the thousands who use the Brooklyn Bridge every day is the result of a suit in the County Court demanding damages for injuries received in the bridge crush. The suit was brought by Mrs. Augusta C. Henry against the Brooklyn Heights Railroad Company. The case was tried before Judge Dike and a jury and a verdict of $176.57 in favor of the plaintiff was brought in yesterday. It was contended that the plaintiff was injured on one of the platforms at the High street station of the bridge by being forced against a stanchion by the crowd. It was not asserted that the plaintiff was injured by the employers of the defendant, but it was declared that the company was negligent in allowing the platforms to be overcrowded and that sufficient men were not employed to protect patrons.

Eleven Seamen Missing.

Fort Monroe, Va., June 12.—Six midshipmen and a crew of five seamen of the steam launch of the battleship Minnesota, now at Hampton Roads, are believed to have been drowned while returning to the Minnesota from shore late Monday night. The party of officers had attended a dance at the Jamestown Exposition grounds, and the launch left the exposition pier about midnight and has not been heard from since. A ditty box, or small chest, belonging to G. W. Westphal, a fireman of the launch, has been picked up afloat near berth No. 27 of the Jamestown warship anchorage. It was stated authoritatively last night that the naval officials have absolute knowledge of the identity of a steamer which ran down the launch, and that the arrest of the crew of the steamer is expected to follow.

Stole a Railroad Train.

Bellingham, Wash., June 12.—The Great Northern Seattle-Bellingham local train was last night stolen from the station, where it was left for a few minutes while the crew went to lunch, by Barkley McCutcheon, a well-know character of his town. Jumping into the cab, McCutcheon threw open the throttle, and away the train shot, going north at terrific speed. The bell was ringing and the whistle blowink continually. The train crew rushed for a "speeder" and followed until it was discovered that the man at the valve had reversed the train and was returning south. He had the train under full speed, and the pursuing crew were barely able to get off the track in time to avoid being run down. McCutcheon later stopped the train and was arrested.

Orphans' Auto Ride.

New York, June 12.—Twelve hundred orphan children will be treated to an automobile outing today under the auspices of the New York Motor Club. They will be taken to Coney Island and return, and will visit all the amusement departments of Dreamland. They will be given luncheon, and each child will have a box of confectionery and an American flag. For the outing 140 automobiles have been donated for the day. These will be well crowded, but all the children invited will be taken. If more machines are obtained more children will be given a ride, there being a reserve list of institutions for that purpose. The use of additional cars will be accepted up to the last minute.

Will Get $10,000 Damages.

Phillipsburg, June 12.—Oscar W. Shafer, a Phillipsburg baker, who was awarded a verdict of $18,000 damages against the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company eight months ago, received word yesterday from the Supreme Court that the verdict has been reduced to $10,000. Mr. Shafer accepts the verdict. Shafer narrowly escaped being killed, and now suffers partial paralysis of his body, by being run down by the Black Diamond Express on the Stockton street crossing at this place more than a year ago. The accident was due to the gateman allowing Shafer to drive on the crossing when the train was approaching.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC!

We beg to express our deep appreciation to the Public of Plainfield and vicinity for the magnificent response made during Carnival week. The people of the city helped the Knights of Columbus to make this their first venture in the Carnival enterprise a flattering success, and we feel we would be lacking in appreciation were we to allow this opportunity to pass without expressing our gratitude. The Knights therefore thank each and every individual who was at all instrumental in bringing about such an unqualified success.

Very respectfully yours,

NEWS IN THE SUBURBS

WESTFIELD.

County Detective John A. Galatian was assaulted Sunday evening as he was walking along Grove street, near the Westfield junction trolley, with his wife and a friend. The men arrested on his charge gave their names as Fred Jacoby and Joseph Kemie, and said they lived in Rahway. The men were held under $500 bond to await the action of the grand jury.

THE FORUM.

Mr. Runyon Explains.

Editor Press:

Will you kindly allow me space in your paper to state my side of the case respecting the automobile cases of John L. Prewitt in which cases the last issue of your paper published what Mr. Prewitt had to say in the Police Court. The statements alleged to have been made by Prewitt and Paddock are absolutely false and the sudden turn of affairs an amateur detective would be able to understand.

On May fifth, John L. Prewitt, a chaffeur, was arrested in the afternoon with my family in the car as well as other friends of ours from Newark. Mr. Prewitt denounced his arrest as an outrage and came to my home and I went with the officer and Mr. Prewitt to the police station and stood responsible for Mr. Prewitt's appearance, he being a stranger. While in the presence of the Magistrate, Prewitt personally pleaded not guilty and in such a manner that the Magistrate informed me that he (Prewitt) was very fresh. On the following day, May sixth, Mr. Prewitt called me up from Newark on the 'phone and in a very nice way asked me to look out for him in the case. I then informed Mr. Prewitt that there was also another complaint against him for speeding and he said he would come to my office, which he did, and he denied emphatically that he was guilty of the charge. I advised him to plead guilty in the complaint lastly heard of which was the earlier alleged violation charged, but, he would not do it. After examining the witnesses that were in the car in the morning I tried again to induce Mr. Prewitt to plead guilty of said charge, stating plainly to him that I believed him guilty of the morning charge, which conversation took place at his second call to my office in this city. After I was satisfied that Prewitt would not plead guilty to the morning charge, I saw Judge Runyon and then and there stated to him that I was not satisfied that my client was not technically guilty of the morning charge; but, that I could not get him to plead guilty; therefore, I would pay a reasonable fine out of my own pocket rather than take up the defense of a case I was not sure of my ground in. The judge said he would look into the facts and let me know. Judge Runyon will endorse the truthfulness of this statement.

Mr. Prewitt has called at my office three times since his arrest and has conferred with me as many more on the 'phone. The cases were to be tried today at two o'clock. Yesterday Prewitt came to Plainfield with Chief of Detectives Gregory, so the article reads, and furnished a complete surprise; but, I was not informed about what was going on until after it was all over and Prewitt had left the city. I was at my office at the time Prewitt was at the police station playing Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.

Respecting Mr. Paddock's alleged statement about his having me call at the office and state that I did not represent Prewitt is absolutely false. I was attending a wedding in Newark on the same street and within a few rods of Mr. Paddock's place of business. I called there and advised him when the case would be tried and Mr. Paddock asked me if there would be any bill against him saying to me as follows, "you know Mr. Runyon I loaned that car to your friend Mr. Kastner, as his was not ready for use," I replied," in that event you will have no bill from me."

There is no doubt in my mind that Mr. Prewitt, by his sudden change of heart and statements, has made many friends who before considered him a very fresh young man.

Sincerely,
ISAAC P. RUNYON.

"PEASANT PRINCE" AGAIN PLEASES LARGE AUDIENCE

TUNEFUL MAC CLYMONT-CLINTON OPERA APPEARS IN NEW FORM.

The second production of the "Peasant Prince," by William E. Mac Clymont and Charles Clinton, was greeted by a large house at the New Plainfield theatre, last night. The performance was given for the benefit of Muhlenberg Hospital and the net proceeds for that institution will be about $400.

The opera was revised and reconstructed making it a two-act instead of a three-act production. The change was a wise one, and was appreciated by the audience. It was found that with three acts the performance was too long, especially the first act.

The performance was given in the same smooth and delightful manner that marked its first presentation a few weeks ago. Judge William N. Runyon, Mrs. William Counihan and Mrs. Theodore Mantz scored hits and they interpreted their parts perfectly. The chorus was better than ever, and there was not a hitch throughout the whole performance. Those taking part were greeted continuously by healty applause and in every respect the production was a satisfying one.

FERRY FARES REDUCED BY STATEN ISLAND COMPANY.

Committee from Union County Board of Freeholders Succeed in Their Efforts.

The committee from the Union County Board of Freeholders of which S. P. T. Wilbur is chairman, appointed to confer with the officials of the Elizabethport-Staten Island Ferry Company for the purpose of securing a reduction of fare across the sound, held a conference yesterday, with the result that concessions were made by the company.

The company agreed to sell thirty-three tickets for $1; sixteen tickets for fifty cents, but if a person buys a single ticket it will be five cents as before. The charge for automobiles will be twenty cents and for a wagon and double team forty cents. The charge for a wagon and single horse will be twenty cents. The charge for a single person with a bicycle will be five cents, one horse hearse twenty cents and double horse hearse forty cents.

The conference brought out the fact that the company heretofore has made a slight reduction to persons purchasing a number of tickets, but signs announcing this was printed in such small type that people could scarcely read it. It seemed to be the desire of the company not to push the sale of these tickets so long as people would pay the straight fare of five cents. Now it agrees to advertise the change of prices and acquaint the public with the reduction.

LITERARY.

The Magic That Fooled Red Dog.

Accompanied with many picturesques comments by the audience, they awkwardly pulled up their chairs. Signor Valdez drew a tiny Mexican flag from his pocket and stuck it between two cracks in the floor. He then motioned to the door in the rear.

"I must ask one more favor, gentlemen. This trick requires exactly seven minutes. During that time I must ask you to remain in absolute silence. After I withdraw by means of this door you will please lock it after me. In exactly seven minutes a small tree will be seen growing in this circle. It will grow as high as the height of the room will permit. I shall then be discovered standing beneath the tree, holding this flag. It is necessary, however, that you remain in perfect silence."

With a deep bow Signor Valdez passed from the room and Whisky Pete locked the door.

The next seven minutes were the quietiest ever recorded in Red Dog. There was no doubt that the gang was impressed. Whisky Pete and Old Graham sat frozen in their chairs staring at the white circle on the floor. Sandy, watch in hand, stood at the door leading into the barroom. The silence was tragic. Exactly six and a half minutes had passed when there came the sound of a man running through the next room. The door was flung open and Mike, the barkeep, who had slipped out to see if everything was all correct in the wet-goods department, stumbled in so rattled he couldn't talk plainly. His face was purple and his tongue was hanging out like a dog.

"Quick," he yelled, "everybody! They've gone—the two of 'em. The professor and the kid with the tickets. They've got every damn cent in the bar, and they're riding like hell for the Rio Grande."—From "Laramie Joe's Vanishing Act" in the June Metropolitan Magazine.

President Charges Nature Writers With Falsehood.

"I don't believe for a minute," said Mr. Roosevelt, "that some of these men who are writing nature stories and putting the word "truth" prominently in their prefaces know the heart of the wild things. Neither do I believe that certain men who, why they may say nothing specifically about truth, do claim attention as realists because of their animal stories, have succeeded in learning the real secrets of the life of the wilderness. They don't know, or if they do know, they indulge in the wildest exaggeration under the mistaken notion that they are strengthening their stories.

"As for the matter of giving these books to the children for the purpose of teaching them the facts of natural history—why, it's an outrage. If these stories were written as fables, and put into the children's hands as fables, all would be well and good. As it is, they are read and believed because the writer not only says they are true but lays stress upon his pledge. There is no more reason why the children of the country should be taught a false natural history than why they should be taught a false physical geography."—"Roosevelt on the Nature Fakirs," in the June Everybody's.

A New Lincoln Anecdote.

The day after the great fire following the fall of Richmond, Lincoln, with a small body-guard, walked through the streets of the charred city. As he approached the corner occupied by General Pickett's residence, he directed the guard to wait, and to their astonishment ran two steps at a time up to the door and rapped. The servants had fled. The "Baby-Bride" had never seen President Lincoln, but she had read his letters to her husband and from him has learned to hold in the highest esteem the great northern President. With her baby in her arms she opened the door and looked up at the tall, gaunt man with the sad face and uncouth ways.

Without a word of explanation he asked:

"Is George Pickett about?"

To hear her husband's name bereft of its title by a Yankee, at that moment, was almost the limit, especially as many a rumor had floated about Richmond concerning the fate which awaited the leaders of the Confederacy.

With all the proud dignity she could command the Baby-Bride replied:

"General Pickett is not at home."

The stranger seemed disappointed and, as he turned to go, remarked:

"I am Abraham Lincoln, an old friend of George's."

"Not President Lincoln!" Mrs. Pickett exclaimed. The tall man shook his head, repeating:

"No. Just Abraham Lincoln, George Pickett's old friend."

Following the instant promptings of the heart which still governs her, "the Baby-Bride' thrust her baby boy into the arms of the gaunt Yankee, as her best effort to express her veneration and confidence, saying:

"I am George Pickett's wife and this is George Pickett's baby."—Willard French, in The World Today, for June.

Family Anniversaries.

"Thanksgiving and Christmas, wedding days and birthdays, are occasions that should never be neglected in the life of the family," writes Margaret E. Sangster in Woman's Home Companion for June. "Even though the married children go far from the early home, living in widely separated neighborhoods, they should make an effort to get together at stated intervals, and so long as their parents live, the old home, with its dear memories, should draw them like a magnet to its hearth. Little cousins ought to know one another and be acquainted as brothers and sisters are. When long trips across the continent involve too great an expense for frequent visits, there is always the letter box on the street corner or the rural free delivery, and the post may be trusted to carry love messages safely from Maine to California, or around the circuit of the globe. How the mother at home watches for tidings from her married children, and how she grieves when for weeks and months she never receives a word and feels that she has dropped out of the daily lives of those for whom she toiled and saved years ago.

"Do you owe your mother a letter or a visit or a gift, you who are far away from her now? Do not let the sun go down until you pay that debt of love.

"Do not forget that although we may have many friends, we can have but one mother, and that no friend can be quite so intimate as she."

Telephoning Across the Atlantic.

Up to the present time wireless telegraphy has not supplemented or even appreciably interfered with ocean telegraph cables. In fact, wireless telegraphy has even aided submarine cables by bringing messages to them from vessels at sea. Of course, it is possible that, with increased invention, knowledge and experience, wireless telegraphy may make such progress as ultimately to interfere with ocean wire telegraphy. These two are essentially future competitors. But there would be no competition between wireless and wire telephony across the ocean, because there is no ocean wire telephony and no immediate prospect of its arrival. It is more likely at present that wireless telephony may be extended in a range to reach across the Atlantic Ocean than that wire telephony may be similarly extended. In other words, there seems more prospect at present of transmitting the human voice by electricity over the surface of the Atlantic Ocean than over an electric insulated wire carried under the ocean. The fact of translantic telephony is far from being accomplished as yet in either of these ways.—From "The Progress of Wireless Telephony," by A. E. Kennelly, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for June.

COAL ROADS MUST PAY LOCAL TAXES FOR STORAGE.

Important and Far-Reaching Decision Made by Supreme Court Just Fort.

Trenton, June 12.—The coal-carrying roads may not make a storage ground of this State unless they pay proper taxes.

Justice Fort, in the Supreme Court, sustained the tax levied yesterday by the borough of Junction against coal belonging to the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company and stored at their place. The syllabus holds:

"Coal shipped from the State of Pennsylvania and stored in the State to await orders for sale, and then to be transhipped to customers purchasing after such storage, is not in interstate commerce and is taxable at the place of storage here."

This means that the great piles of anthracite at South Plainfield and along the Lackawanna, Reading and other roads can be taxed as personal property.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Helen Sprague Martin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Martin, of Hillside avenue, to Henry D. Bushnell, son of Mr. and Mrs. John D. Bushnell, of Central avenue. Mr. Bushnell is engaged in business in Pittsburg. The wedding will take place in the fall.

LOOK HERE FOR IT.

Many a Plainfield Reader Will Be Interested.

When people read about the cures made by a medicine endorsed from far away, is it surprising that they wonder if the statements are true? But when they read of cases right here at home, positive proof is within their reach, for close investigation is an easy matter.

Mrs. Julia Molloy, of 740 West Front street, Plainfield, N. J., says: "Many so-called cures for backache and kidney disease have been taken by me, but no medicine ever stopped my aches and pains until I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at Randolph's pharmacy. I took the pills according to directions, and found before finishing the first box that they were far more healing and brought even more relief from backache than their owners claim for them. I continued with the treatment and was cured, and now do not suffer from aches or pains or kidney troubles."

BY JOSEPH BROWN COOKE. COPYRIGHT 1907 BY STORY-PRESS CORPORATION

CHAPTER XXV.
A Drive in the Storm.

A moment later the doctor returned hurriedly to the library for his medicine case and said:

"I wish we could get consultation here in the country," he continued, measuring out some powders with a critical air and depositing them on bits of paper which he had cut for the purpose. "Most of the deaths in this part of the world are from accident or old age, and a man with a large city practice and extensive hospital experience might possibly suggest some means of prolonging her life for a time. We cannot hope to save her, but I wish we could keep her till Carney comes."

"I have telegraphed my friend MacArdel to come and help me solve the mystery of the place," I ventured cautiously, not wishing to hurt his professional pride. "You know he was with me here last summer and we had a number of very peculiar experiences then, so he knows a good deal about it already, and I thought we could work together to advantage. Perhaps he could be of service to you at the same time."

"The very man!" exclaimed the doctor. "I know him well by reputation. When will he arrive?"

"If my wire is delivered promptly he can get here on the midnight train," I replied. "I know he will start at once, for I sent for him at his own suggestion, in response to a letter from me telling him of the tunnel affair, and I think he has some very definite theories on the subject."

"Just the thing!" cried the doctor, picking up the powders and hurrying toward the door. "Let me know the minute he sets foot in the house. I shall be here all night."

As he left the room I strove to collect my scattered thoughts and determine the present aspect of the situation. If the widow could not write, who, in heaven's name, did send the notes? It did not appear probable that the doctor was wrong in what he had said, and, moreover, the statement served to explain the merriment of Jenks when I had accused her directly of being the author of the letters.

Still, she had assumed all responsibility for them, which was tantamount to writing them as far as their practical features were concerned, and I finally decided that if they were not her own work they must have been written at her dictation, which really amounted to the same thing.

I spent the afternoon in the library, hoping that I might see Miss Carney and at least offer her my sympathy in her present trouble, even if I said no more at this time, but she did not come down stairs during the entire day, and at dinner she sent me word by Mrs. Randolph that Dr. MacArdel would be very welcome, not only because I had asked him to come, but for himself as well, and in the hope that he might be of benefit to Miss Weston.

The storm had increased steadily all day but, in spite of its fury and the drifts that were piling up and blocking the roads at every point, I announced my determination to go with the sleigh to meet MacArdel.

"You'd better not try to bring three people back through the drifts," said the doctor, who had just come in for a bite and a cup of coffee. "You can't drive two horses to advantage in this weather, and if you insist upon going why don't you take my mare and cutter and go alone? She's been in the stable all day and she knows every inch of the road, so if you just give her her head she'll bring you through all right. You'd better take my storm coat and gloves, too, for you'll find the wind pretty cold after you've been in it a bit."

Although I had but two miles or thereabouts to travel from the house to the railway station I made an early start and had the horse at the door before ten o'clock. The doctor came down to see me off and gave me a few parting words of advice.

"We Cannot Hope to Save Her."

As I opened the door it was almost blown out of my hand by the force of the wind and great sheets of snow and sleet came sailing in, under the protecochere and half way down the hall.

I bundled myself up in the doctor's great fur coat and surrounded myself with his rugs and then, bowing my head to the fury of the gale, I did as I had been told, and let the mare take her own gait and pick her own way to the train.

The train was 40 minutes late and, after putting my horse in the stable and blanketing her comfortably in accordance with the doctor's instructions, I returned to the station and paced restlessly up and down the waiting room, now and then peering anxiously through the frost-coated windows in a childlike way, as if my eyes could penetrate the blackness of the night and see for miles down the track.

Finally, as the time for its arrival drew near, one of the station men, with that intuition so frequently observed and so incomprehensible to the average individual, suddenly picked up a lantern and strode out on the platform. The heavy rumble of the oncoming locomotive and the faint squeal of its whistle struck my ears at the same instant and, looking out, I saw its single bleary eye gleaming dimly in the distance as it plowed on through the whirling sleet.

I was about to go out on the platform myself when the station master called me to the telephone and the doctor at Carney-Croft said hurriedly:

"I suppose the train is late but get MacArdel here as soon as you can if you want him to see her alive. It won't be many hours now and it may be—"

There was a snap and a buzzing sound for an instant and I knew that the wire was down.

In another moment MacArdel was by my side, and as soon as we could get the lantern lighted and the mare out of the stable we started on our wild drive to Carney-Croft.

CHAPTER XXVI.
The Entrance of Chico.

I lashed the panting beast until great welts stood out on her sides and her hide was lathered with foam, while we dashed along in the blinding storm and finally galloped through the gateway and up the winding road toward the house. The snow was drifting heavily and MacArdel leaned over the side of the sleigh and held the lantern close to the ground so that I could see such little traces of the road as remained or we would have been ditched a dozen times in our mad race to the dying girl.

Suddenly, as we neared the house, and at a place where the drifts were deeper and the exhausted horse struggled heavily in her effort to make her way on, a man sprang out of the sleet and, grasping the animal by the head, threw her backward with almost superhuman strength and brought us to a standstill.

"What do you mean!" I shouted, raising the whip high over my head. "Let us go on or I'll brain you!"

"Don't strike, Mr. Ware!" he gasped, "it's Bobbs, sir! You remember Bobbs!"

Elephant Kills Boy.

Buffalo, N. Y., June 12.—Goaded to fury by the torments of a dozen small boys, who had followed her for several blocks of the parade and pelted her with small missiles, Ruth, a feature of Cole Brothers' Circus, and said to be the largest living elephant, shot her trunk into a densely packed crowd of spectators at Lafayette square, in Main street, and when she withdrew it the body of twelve-year-old Rocco Laquino dangled in the air. With a trumpet or rage the beast lifted the boy above her head and brought him down with terrific force on the pavement. Then she released her hold of her victim and left him prostrate. His skull had been fractured by the impact. Lily, another elephant, following the vicious Ruth, struck the body with her foot and knocked it several feet in toward the curb line.

St. Louis to Kill Rats.

St. Louis, Mo., June 12.—This city is going to lead the nation in a war on rats. Next Saturday night has been set for the initial slaughter, and plans are going forward which mean the running to earth of thousands of the pesky rodents. It will be an extraordinary war, a war to the death, a war of extermination. It is optional with the citizens whether they poison the rats, catch them in traps or club them. Dr. John G. Harper is promoter of the project. He has set the date and asked the Mayor to give the slaughter his official sanction. Probably 100,000 citizens will engage in the first battle.

TENNIS.

At the Plainfield Country Club courts on Saturday, June 22, there will be the men's progressive doubles, with prizes for the two players making the most progression.

The two new courts at the Park Club were opened yesterday and used for the first time. They will also be used on Saturday in the championship tournament of the East Jersey Lawn Tennis Association.

Plans are underway to establish tennis courts at the Park Golf Club for the members who wish to divide their time between playing golf and tennis.

On account of the championship tennis tournament at the Park Club Saturday there will be no tennis events at the Plainfield Country Club that day.

The Misses Wildey are a valuable acquisition to the tennis contingent of the Plainfield Country Club and it was largely through their efforts that the club now holds first place in the East Jersey Lawn Tennis championship tournament.

GOLF.

The game of golf is more popular in Plainfield this season than during any previous one in its history and there are more people playing the game than ever before. There is scarcely a week but that some new face can be seen on the local links and the novices soon learn the play. This is especially true at the Plainfield Country Club, where the membership has been increasing steadily.

WILL PLAY BALL FOR BENEFIT OF HOSPITAL

TEAMS REPRESENTING VAUDEVILLE COMPANY AND THEATRE TO MEET.

For the benefit of the hospital, teams representing the vaudeville company appearing this week at the theatre, and a nine captained by Manager William Counihan will play ball at Crescent Oval tomorrow afternoon. The contest will start between 3 and 4 o'clock and end some time.

The vaudeville athletes will play in make-up, but they swear to keep shop-talk and stage business out of the game. They insist that they really know how to play the game, and point to the victory of the White Rat team, of which most of them are members, over the Yankee Doodle combination of George Cohan's, in New York, last week, when they met for the benefit of an orphan asylum. Counihan backs them up in the statement that the game will be for a decision and not monkeyshines. A big crowd is looked for.

Judge Runyon and Mayor Smalley will be the umpires. Both have had experience as umps, but nobody knows whether it has done them any good.

The batting orders:

Vaudeville—Bernard, 2b; Weston, lf; Bedeni, 1b; Montgomery, 3b; Ray, p; F. Azard, c; G. Azard, ss; Arthur, cf; Ryan, rf.

Theatre—Counihan, ss; Woolston, 2b; Hoyt, 3b; Gillette, rf; Cunningham, cf; Payne, 1b; Golden, lf; Fritz, c; Texier, p.

The Y. M. C. A. nine will not have Nelson catching at the game in Scotch Plains Saturday. Schoonmaker will receive Minford's slants in the Rutgers' man's place.

"CENTRAL PARK"

Was—Is—Will Be

IT WAS, only about a year ago, just a pretty farm.

IT IS to day the finest building site in Plainfield, with broad avenues macadamized their entire width, concrete curb, sidewalks, trees, gas, electric light, in fact all improvements. Nearly $100,000 expended in new and handsome dwellings, now ready for the market.

WHAT IT WILL BE we hardly dare predict, with contracts out for even more extensive improvements and twelve more handsome residences.

Central Park is that beautifully situated tract bounded by Park, Prospect, Hillside and Thornton Avenues.

Lots selling rapidly—Prices very low—Great investment or speculative opportunities.

CELEBRATED THEIR FIFTH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Pound Entertain Fifty Friends in Honor of the Event.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Pound, of West Sixth street, celebrated their fifth wedding anniversary, last night, when they entertained about fifty relatives and friends. The home was attractively decorated, pink and white being the prevailing colors. During the evening their was a program of instrumental and vocal selections, a feature being the solos by Miss Pound, a sister of Mr. Pound.

The couple received many presents including furniture, cut-glass and other articles of use and value. Following congratulations supper was served.

Mr. and Mrs. Pound were married at Milltown five years ago yesterday, the bride being Miss Elizabeth Dalmer, of this place. They have resided in this city since, Mr. Pound being engaged in the plumbing business with his brother under the firm name of D. H. Pound & Brother. OBJECTIONS TO THE WESTFIELD SEWER.

Rahway Will Fight Proposed Pipe Line Connections.

The Middlesex Water Company, through Frank Bergen, has agreed to pay Westfield $10,000 toward a pipe line sewer, to a point beyond the dam in the Robinson branch of the Rahway river, which the Middlesex Water Company is now having constructed to use the water for commercial purposes.

This action is brought about by the City of Rahway refusing to allow the Cranford sewer, which passes through Rahway, being used by Westfield for sewer purposes.

The proposed action of Westfield will be vigorously fought by the Rahway Common Council and Board of Health, who will take steps to stop the making of a dumping ground of Rahway. The water of Milton Lake a picturesque spot, covering some ten acres, which was recently bought by the Middlesex Water Company, has been emptied of its water, and is now a source of nuisance to those who live in the vicinity.

Presentation to S. B. Howe, Jr.

The class in economics at the Plainfield High School, at the last class assembly of the school year, this morning, presented to its instructor, S. B. Howe, Jr., a copy of the book entitled "Principles of Economics," by Prof. Edwin R. A. Seligman, of Columbia College. The presentation was made by William Lambert, of the class, and he expressed the appreciation of the members for the way in which Mr. Howe had made the study one of great interest. It is said that the Plainfield High School was about the first in the State to introduce the study of economics and this is the first year the pupils have had it.

RED BOOK FOR JUNE.

The leading story in the Red Book Magazine for June sounds the note of Summer. "Crazyland," is the appropriate name of a great summer park, and thither goes one Frobisher, a man of fashion, and there he has a most extraordinary adventure, the account of which by John D. Ewain is very amusing to read. A western story that is quite out of the ordinary is "The Little Gold Maid," by Edfrid Bingham; and "The Capture of Miss Cohen" tells of a charming girl's romantic adventure in the Scottish highlands. A gripping human story of paternal love is Gertrude Dix's "Van Velsor's Apotheosis"; and in striking contrast is "The Gratitude of Lady Billy," Phillip Verrill Mighels' tale of a friendly goat. Another story of more than ordinary power is "The Dwarf" by George Bronson-Howard. In addition to its eleven splendid short stories The Red Book magazine for June contains an article on the career of Julia Marlowe by Louis V. DeFoe. The illustrations are from rare photographs of Miss Marlowe in the parts which made her famous early in her artistic life. The June issue is opened with fourteen new, specially posed portraits of Miss Marlowe, together with an equal number of the foremost actresses of the Parisian stage.

Backward Spring Suicide.

New York, June 12—Ludwig Graf, nineteen years old, who had a furnished room with the family of Christian Heu, at No. 19 Troutman street, committed suicide yesterday by hanging himself with a strap to a bedpost. He was a painter and had lived in the Troutman street house only a few days. According to a member of the Heu family, Graf had complained about the continued cold weather and threatened to take his life if it did not become warm. He had been dead about ten hours when found, an ambulance surgeon said.

After Umbrella Trust.

Philadelphia, Pa., June 12.—Acting upon instructions from Washington, United States District Attorney Thompson will today move against the so-called Umbrella Trust. While he will not divulge the names of the concerns against which he will proceed, he admits that bills will be framed against some of the prominent firms and corporations in the East. He believes that his evidence against them is so strong that they will not be able to get in out of the rain.

Jury to Judge Mrs. Eddy.

Concord, N. H., June 12.—A motion asking for a trial before a jury of Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy's competency to manage her affairs was filed in the Merrimack County Superior Court yesterday by counsel for the plaintiffs in the suit to obtain an accounting of the property of Mrs. Eddy. The court is asked to give a hearing on this motion. In the same court Monday Judge Robert N. Chamberlin announced his intention of appointing a master to determine Mrs. Eddy's competency.

Duke Helps Raritan Church.

James B. Duke, President of the American Tobacco Company, and who owns the palatial country residence near Somerville, has come forward in the aid of the Methodist Episcopal church in that place, which is striving to raise enough money to purchase a pipe organ. Mr. Duke contributed $500. The sum of $1,480 has now been subscribed and only $220 is necessary to be secured yet.

INDUSTRIAL ITEMS.

In 1891 Canada had 2,000,000 acres under wheat. Today her wheat area has passed the 5,000,000 acre mark.

The world is now using 53,000,000 tons of pig iron yearly, and it is estimated that there will be an iron ore famine in less than forty years from now.

Pipes made of re-enforced concrete for transmitting water under pressure have been constructed. These pipes are really one continuous tube each several hundred feet long. In diameter they are from two feet to three feet, the longest single section being 600 feet. The inside is made smooth, plained lumber being used in the forms.

HYMEN'S BUSY EVENING

Five Couples Come Before His Shrine and Plight Their Troth.

PRETTY DECORATIONS

Brides and Grooms Joined In Atmospheres Redolent of Flowers and Ferns—Garden Gate at One Wedding.

Cupid having been busy aforetime, Hymen was up and doing in Plainfield and the suburbs last night. June may be backward as far as weather goes, but the weddings of last evening demonstrated that it is still the month for orange blossoms and the metaphorical pealing of marriage bells, whatever may have happened to June roses, the clambering honeysuckle and other adjuncts to the honeymoon cottage.

Five weddings were solemnized in Plainfield and suburbs to the westward. Two were celebrated in the borough, two in Dunellen and one in Piscataway.

De Meza—White.

Miss Florence Heyer White, granddaughter of Mrs. William White, of Willow avenue, and William G. DeMeza, of this city, were quietly married at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. William White, in the presence of the relatives of the two families and a few intimate friends. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, of the First Baptist church, the bride's pastor.

The bride was gowned in a lace robe over white silk, trimmed with lace, and she carried a shower bouquet of white roses. The maid of honor, Miss Minnie Nischwitz, wore a gown of white silk mull, trimmed with lace and carried pink roses. The best man was John DeMeza, a brother of the groom.

The wedding march was played on the piano by Charles Yates, of New Brunswick; the bride, her uncle, George White, and maid of honor entering the parlor from the hall through one door and the groom and best man from another, the party meeting in the large room, where the officiating clergyman met them. The bride was given in marriage by her uncle.

After the ceremony congratulations were offered and supper served. Later the newly-wedded couple left in an automobile for Bound Brook, where they took a train for Atlantic City. They will be gone two weeks and upon their return will board in this city for awhile.

The home was prettily decorated for the wedding. In the parlor there was a profusion of palms and white flowers. The prevailing colors in the dining room were white and green.

The bride received many handsome gifts, including a piano from the groom, and cut-glass and furniture from other relatives. Mrs. DeMeza has been a resident of the borough for several years and is highly esteemed in a large circle of friends and acquaintances. The groom is also well known in this city, where he is a practicing lawyer, and enjoys a large friendship.

Line—Brouwer.

Miss Catherine Mae Brouwer, daughter of the late Aaron S. Brouwer, and Clarence L. Line, son of J. H. Line, of this city, were married at the Brouwer homestead in Dunellen last night, at 7 o'clock. The wedding was attended by a large gathering of relatives and friends.

The house was prettily decorated. The color scheme was pink and green in the parlor and white and green in the rest of the house. In the parlor, where the ceremony was performed, by Rev. E. E. Roberson, of the Monroe Avenue church, was an artificial garden gate, entwined with flowers, before which the couple stood as the wedding lines were spoken.

The best man was William B. Nevius, Jr., of Brooklyn, and the ushers were John I. Nelson, of New Market; George Allyn Lown, of Brooklyn. The maid of honor was Miss May Hazelwood, of Brooklyn. The bridesmaids were the Misses Caroline E. and Sarah A. Brouwer, sisters of the bride. The Misses Eloise and Marguerite Brouwer were flower girls. The wedding music was played by an orchestra.

A reception followed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Line left for a week's honeymoon trip on the 9:46 train. They will live on Woodbine avenue, this city.

The bride was dressed in white monseline, princess cut, tied with large bow knots of mouseline, with yoke of marie net; a bridal veil was caught up with orange blossoms and lilies of the valley, and carried bride roses. The maid of honor was dressed with white lace, over white taffeta, and carried pink roses. The bride received a large number of gifts.

LOW FALL RESULTS IN SERIOUS INJURY

RAYMOND M'VOY SUFFERS BROKEN KNEE-CAP IN TUMBLE FROM STOOP.

Raymond McVoy, associated with his father, I. L. McVoy, of East Front street, in the plumbing business, fell a distance of four feet yesterday afternoon, and as a result of what ordinarily would have been a trivial tumble, he will be laid up for four weeks. He was taken to the hospital this morning suffering from a broken kneecap.

Mr. McVoy was at work in a house near the lower end of Park avenue. In hurrying to his wagon, which stood at the curb, he stumbled on the stoop, and fell to the ground. He struck on his knees. In trying to arise, he discovered that his right knee was badly injured.

Frank Emmons, who was helping in the work, assisted him to the wagon and drove him to his home. Dr. Endicott, summoned by the family, discovered after a short examination that the kneecap had sustained a serious fracture. An operation will be necessary to save the leg from permanent lameness, and Mr. McVoy was taken to Muhlenberg Hospital this morning. He will be there for perhaps two weeks, and another two weeks will be required to mend the fracture completely.

SECOND REGIMENT'S SEA GIRT SHOOTING TEAM

PRELIMINARY MATCH WILL DECIDE NATIONAL TOURNEY TEAM.

Brig.-Gen. Bird W. Spencer, who will have charge of the New Jersey National Guard trophy match will not be at Sea Girt on Saturday, as he expects to be at West Point on that day. Colonel Charles A. Reed, one of the assistant inspectors, will be on hand, however, and conduct the preliminary practice. Each of the five regiments will have teams entered.

The Second Regiment team will be composed of Major William B. Martin, Captain Franklin Phillips, Captain John W. Stevens, Lieut. Charles F. Silvester, Lieut. Albert I. Littell, Sergeant Marcus S. Farr, Sergeant John M. Dabb, Sergeant David S. Lloyd, Corporal George W. P. Silvesterfi Corporal Clarence A. Bilyeu, Private William M. Hooey.

It is expected the teams will all be on hand early tomorrow, as the entire day will be devoted to preliminary practice., and it will be the first shooting on the range for the season of 1907. The scores made on the day may give some idea of which will be the winning team on Saturday, when the match will be shot.

The fact that the match will have much to do with the selection of the team which will represent New Jersey in the National match in Ohio in August has aroused the interest of the crack shots in the National Guard.

Three new trophies will be shot for this year by the men of the Second Regiment. They are the Salter medal, the Mack trophy and the Williams trophy. The Salter medal will be shot at 500 and 600 yards, ten shots at each range. The Mack trophy will be open only to enlisted men and will be shot at 200, 300, 500 and 600 yards. The Williams trophy will be open to teams of five men at 200, 300 and 500 yards, ten shots for each man at each range.

Perkins Offends Court.

Randolph Perkins, Republican leader of the New Jersey Assembly last year, one of whose manorial homes is at Woodcliffe, in Bergen county, was arrested at Hackensack last week for exceeding the auto speed limit. He demanded a hearing which was set down by Justice Heath for June 15. The police say that Mr. Perkin's auto has been a frequent offender, and that he has been cautioned before. While before the Court, Mr. Perkins flipped the butt of a cigarette upon the floor, for which he was rebuked by Justice Heath.

Condolence to Former Pastor.

At the monthly meeting of the Consistory of Trinity Reformed church, last night, the clerk was instructed to convey to Rev. Dr. A. V. V. Raymond, former pastor of the church and now president of Union College, the sincere sympathy of the church for his bereavement in the death of Mrs. Raymond. Both Dr. and Mrs. Raymond were held in high esteem by Trinity Reformed church and the death of Mrs. Raymond was a great shock to all.

TOBIN'S CHANGE OF FRONT

Appears at Trenton With His Books and Allows Committee to Look Them Over—

ON THE STAND TODAY

Investigators Find That Lewis Lawton & Son's Check Accounts Have Many Erasures.

When George J. Tobin, of this city, learned yesterday morning that Speaker Lethbridge of the House was going down to Trenton to issue a warrant for his arrest unless he produced his books, as ordered by the investigation committee, he changed his attitude entirely. He left Trenton Tuesday in a very defiant mood, and declared he would not produce the books and would employ counsel and do everything possible to prevent any disclosures. Yesterday morning he sent word that he was on his way with the books, and about the middle of the afternoon he drove up in front of the State House with a big automobile containing all his books and documents in connection with his work for the State. When Mr. Backes found Tobin had arrived, he had the committee adjourn until today, and the books were brought into one of the rooms adjoining the State Chamber, so that after they had been gone over privately by Backes and the committee they could be locked up for the night.

Though Tobin had been ordered to be present yesterday morning at 10.30 with his books, it was considerably after three o'clock when he arrived in the State House. As he took the stand Mr. Backes asked him if he had his books with him. He replied that he had, and that they were in front of the Capitol in an automobile.

"Your automobile?" queried Mr. Backes.

"No; mine is out of commission. I hired one to bring my books over."

Counsel asked what period the books covered. Mr. Tobin said they covered all his work for the State and all his work for Lawton & Son. Tobin stated that he had also brought his check book, letters, manifold copies, daily blotter entries, day books, cash books and ledgers; also all letters and papers relating to his dealings with Lawton & Son. Counsel asked if he had his contracts with Lawton & Son for the work on the prison and the new office wing. Witness said he had forgotten to bring these, but that he had them with him Tuesday. Mr. Backes obtained copies of the contracts from Mr. Lawtoff, and showed that the prison agreement was for $20,000 and that for the new office wing $10,377.

At this juncture there arose a question as to probing Mr. Tobin's books. Mr. Backes said he wanted to offer the books and papers in evidence and then have them examined. Mr. Tobin called attention to the fact that the books were very heavy and were still in the automobile outside the Capitol. Mr. Backes intimated that he would like some one to examine the books before he took them up formally with the committee.

Mr. Tobin suggested that his books be taken to the private office of Mr. Backes in Trenton, and there counsel could delve in them in the evening.

This arrangement was agreed to, but later Mr. Backes modified it and concluded that it would be handier to make the preliminary examination in the State House. The books were then removed from the automobile and taken to one of the Senate committee rooms. At a late hour last night Mr. Backes and his assistants, with Mr. Tobin, were busy going over the books.

When a Daily Press representative stopped in to see the assistants employed by the committee and when asked how they were making out, one of them answered:

"Very well; we have not struck any erasures as yet."

Yesterday's session was not at all lacking in interest, for in the books of Lawton which escaped the ravages of the flames last January Mr. Backes discovered traces which by suggestion at least lead toward some questionable transactions connected with the "State contractor's" dealings with the State during the seven years of his monopoly.

In Lawton's "surviving" ledger, Mr. Backes found item after item in which it was apparent that a name had been erased and replaced by the initials "L. L. & Son," or the name Lewis Lawton & Son. Mr. Backes also found check vouchers and check stubs corresponding to these entries made out by Lewis Lawton & Son and payable to Lewis Lawton & Son.

Lawton's bookkeeper, Miss May G. Beck, would not explain these erasures, nor would she say that the peculiar coincidence of their recurrence carried any significance. Nor could she recall any relation between items

VAIL DENIES HE SET FIRE.

Former Postmaster Testifies In His Own Defense.

Former Postmaster Charles T. Vail, who was placed on trial at Flemington Monday upon a charge of burning the West Portal store property, took the stand in his own behalf late yesterday. The State rested at noon. The defendant's lawyers made application to the court to instruct the jury to acquit Vail because of insufficient evidence connecting him with the burning of the building, but Judge Connell ordered the attorneys to proceed. The defendant was called after several other witnesses had testified as to Hummell's sobriety and the incidents attending the fire.

Vail said his memory was bad as to dates and slow to act since the trolley accident. At times he seemed to think deeply, but usually responded promptly to the questions hurled at him under severe cross-examination, particularly when emphasizing sentences tending to indicate his innocence. Vail denied all of Hummell's statements which implicated him in the burning of the store building. He said he was at Plainfield at the time of the fire. He was still on the stand when court adjourned for the day.

Commencement exercises of St. Gabriel's Academy, of North Plainfield, were held yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the Park Club, where a large number of relatives and friends of the academy and the graduates gathered to enjoy an excellent program arranged by the Sisters.

A feature of the occasion was the presence of the Rt. Rev. J. A. McFaul, D. D. L. L. D., Bishop of the Trenton Diocese, who made a short address to the graduates and their many friends. CARPET FUND SWELLED BY SUCCESSFUL SALE

ANNUAL JUNE AFFAIR OF THE CHURCH OF THE HEAVENLY REST.

The annual June sale of the Ladies' Guild of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, Clinton avenue, was held at the parish house yesterday. It was very successful, drawing a large and profitable attendance from 4 o'clock in the afternoon until 10 o'clock at night. The proceeds will be devoted to the carpet fund.

The prettily decorated booths were looked after by the following:

Fancy, Mrs. Merrill, chairman; Mrs. J. A. Babcock and Miss Eleanor Williams. Candy, Mrs. Sutton and Mrs. Harris; ice cream, Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Fraleigh; cake, Mrs. Brooks, Mrs. Bunting, Mrs. Campbell; art gallery, Mrs. W. B. Grannatt; lemonade, girls of the Sunday-school.

In the evening a program of entertainment was given. It included recitations by Mrs. W. B. Grannatt; and songs by Miss Viola Lievers, J. A. Babcock and the quartette choir of the church. A pleasant incident of the affair was the presence of the new rector, Rev. Mr. Townsend, who took charge of the parish last Sunday.

General supervision of the sale was exercised by Miss Elizabeth Forster, chairman of the committee in charge. She was assisted by all the members.

CHRISTIAN WORK SOCIETY HOLDS ANNUAL FESTIVAL

ENTERTAINING FEATURES IN AN ACCOMPANYING PROGRAM.

Under the auspices of the Women's Society for Christian Work of the Seventh-day Baptist church, the annual strawberry and ice cream social, the last society event of the season, was held in the church parlors, last night. In connection with the social there was a fine entertainment, the program being arranged by Mrs. James Everitt Kimball and Miss Ernestine C. Smith.

Mrs. L. R. Howard favored the audience with several soprano solos, most of them being Scotch ballads, and then several of Louise Alcott's books were illustrated and the audience was supposed to guess the names. "Eight Cousins," was represented by a placard bearing the names of the eight grandchildren of Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis. Miss Ethel Titsworth illustrated "Old Fashioned Girl," and Miss Rose Davis, "Rose in Bloom." John Cottrell, Jr., and Harold Spicer illustrated "Little Men," and Mrs. William R. Mosher and Mrs. Charles H. Dunham, "Little Women," while William C. and Frank J. Hubbard represented "Joe's Boys."

The second part of the program consisted of a series of tableaux, illustrating a chapter from "Little Women," Mrs. Nathan E. Lewis reading the chapter. Those who took part in the tableaux were Miss Eva Rogers, Miss Marie Rogers, Miss Helen Ford, Charles Neagle, and George Clark. The scenery, comprising a tower and cave was very effective, while the familiar witch was exceedingly funny.

During and before the entertainment ice cream and strawberries were sold, the refreshments being in charge of Mrs. Frank J. Hubbard, chairman; Mrs. William H. Rogers, Mrs. C. L. Ford and Mrs. Charles H. Dunham. A number of young women from the church were waitresses. The affair was a great success and the society will net a substantial profit.

HURT BY BURSTING GUN

De Witt Giles, of Piscataway, May Lose Sight of One Eye.

SHOT AT BLACKBIRDS

Weapon Exploded As He Pulled Trigger, Shattering Left Hand and Injuring Eye—At the Hospital.

DeWitt Giles, a former township committeeman of Piscataway, was severely injured yesterday afternoon by the bursting of a gun. He is threatened with the loss of his right eye as a result of the accident.

Giles picked up the gun to shoot at blackbirds that were circling over his fields, about two miles from New Market. As he pulled the trigger the gun exploded. His left hand was badly mangled, and he was cut dangerously about the eye. He was attended by a doctor at his home immediately after the accident, but his condition was so threatening this morning that he hurried to Dr. F. C. Ard for examination as to his eye, and from Dr. Ard's office he went to the hospital. It was said at the latter place at noon that he had not been examined yet, and the exact nature of his injuries could not be told. It is feared that the sight of his eye has been destroyed, and the doctors will have trouble in saving his hand or his arm.

Mr. Giles was a relative of the Giles boy who was fatally injured by the bursting of a gun in South Plainfield recently. Two of his cousins were killed in a railroad accident a short time ago.

DUNELLEN CLUB ELECTION.

Present Officers of Growing Organization Expected to Be Chosen Again.

The Dunellen Club will hold its semi-annual election tomorrow night. It is expected the present officers will be re-elected.

During the six months which the club has existed the membership has trebled and the club has moved to quarters better located, furnished and equipped the club rooms and now has a substantial balance in the treasury for further expenditures in the way of making the club rooms equal to any in this part of the State. Later, it is intended to build a clubhouse and gymnasium, and with the interest shown by members and those who are contemplating joining, the time when steps towards securing a location for the clubhouse will be taken are not in the distant future. The club stands for good citizenship and all things which work for the betterment of the moral standing of a community.

"Phil." Smith is moving about considerable this season. Last week he signed with the Newark Eastern League Club, and this week Manager Burnham released him, allowing him to sign wherever he pleases. It is to be hoped that he will land a berth before long where he will stay and have a chance to make good. The pitching staff of the Newark team is now full and in condition and Smith was not needed.

Manager Murray, of the Philadelphia Nationals, made another good move when he secured Pitcher Brown, the crack twirler of the St. Louis Nationals, even if he did have to give Pitcher Lush and a money consideration. Brown has been doing fine work this season and should strengthen the Quakers.

The Y. M. C. A. team will have one of its hardest contests of the season on Saturday, when it will meet Scotch Plains at home. The Plains nine is always a difficult one to defeat on its own grounds and the association aggregation will have to put up a gilt-edged article of ball to win. The battery will be Minford and Ralph Schoonmaker. Marsh, the former Scotch Plains player, will be on first.

It is to be hoped that when the Y. M. C. A. and Clinton Avenue teams meet again that they will put up a better exhibition than the first time. The players are capable of putting up good ball and should do so.

Because of illness during the early part of the season Willie Keeler has not been playing his usual game, especially at the bat. His timely hitting has been missed.

The Elizabeth Invaders still continue to lose games as has been their custom this season. The interest in the team at Elizabeth is very much on the wane.

The Raritans, of Perth Amboy, will play Clinton Avenue at Crescent Oval, Saturday afternoon. Randolph will pitch for the local nine, and he will be opposed by a strong twirler.

It is expected that Jack Peacock will join the Dunellen team after this week.

GOLF.

A half dozen entries have been received from the members of the Westfield Golf Club for the open one-day tournament at the Plainfield Country Club on Saturday. As the players are not obliged to send their entries in advance, it being their privilege to post their names at the first tee, it is believed that a majority will do that.

The special committee, of which Julius E. Erickson is the chairman, has been kept busy this week preparing for the open golf tournament on Saturday at the Plainfield Country Club. This will be the first event of the kind ever held here and it is the desire of the club that it shall be a success in every respect.

Occasionally Leighton Calkins plays the game and his score shows that he is almost as strong as ever in the fine points. His many golf duties, aside from business, will hardly permit him to play to any extent.

"Marty" O'Loughlin is preparing to enter the golf championship play in Philadelphia next week. He will leave here on Monday. This tournament will bring together the crack players of the country and "Marty" hopes to make a good showing as he is in the best condition and playing at the top of his game.

There is a revival of interest in the game of golf at the Middlebrook Country Club. Every week a number of players are to be found on the course at Finderne and appropriate prizes are offered in competitions. There will be special events on July 4.

The Plainfield Country Club will have a full day of events on the course and tennis courts on July 4, and it should be one of the best special days of the season. There will also be extra events at the Park Golf Club that day.

Mrs. N. Pendleton Rogers, president of the Women's Metropolitan Golf Association, will be among the prominent women golfers who will take part in the team matches at Atlantic City this week.

To relieve the congestion on the course, hereafter the privileges of the Scarsdale Golf Club may be extended by a member to only one guest on Saturday afternoons, Sundays and holidays, and such guests may use the links only when playing with the member introducing them. Only single matches will be permitted until after 2:30 p. m. on Saturdays and holidays and 1:30 p. m. on Sundays. Match play is now in progress for the Milne cup, which was first put in competition in 1905. A cup has been offered for the player making the best gross score to November 5 inclusive.

The Queen's Jubilee Cup, the gift of F. E. Vivian Bond, will be competed for in a thirty-six hole handicap on Saturday at the Fairfield County Golf Club. Under the deed of gift only players handicapped at eighteen holes or under may start, and, so that all hands may swing their clubs, the committee has reduced for that day only all handicaps of nineteen strokes or over to eighteen strokes.

TENNIS.

The East Jersey Lawn Tennis Association mixed doubles championship will begin on the courts of the Park Club Saturday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock, and will be concluded on Saturday, June 22. In addition to this event the fourth annual open tournament of the association will be held on the courts of the Elizabeth Town and Country Club, Elizabeth on August 27 to September 2. The play will be on the point system. Because the Plainfield Country Club holds first and second places in the championship play, there is uusual interest among local tennis players.

THE WRITERS.

Alfred Austin has now held the position of poet laureate for eleven years.

Algernon Charles Swinburne, the poet, is engaged in writing a new tragedy, the subject of which is Cesare Borgia.

Current Literature reminds a forgetful world that Oliver Herford once spoke of the sacred soil of Boston as "an abandoner literary farm."

Finley Peter Dunne, the author of "Mr. Dooley," was once stopping in the country with a well-known banker, who, being impressed by the beautiful surrounding scenery, suggested that they take a walk the next morning at 6 o'clock. "Thank you," replied Mr. Dunne, "but I never walk in my sleep."

Hugh Pendexter, the author, comes of a notable family. Not only his great grand-father on his father's side, but his great grand-father on his mother's side, belonged to the minutemen who were aroused by Paul Revere in his midnight ride. Both great-grandfathers had the distinction of fighting in the battle of Bunker Hill, and both were wounded.

Sixteen Popular Novels.

The list here (from The Pratt Library Monthly Bulletin) does not include any of the novels ordinarily called "classic" or "standard," but is a list of some other novels that year in and year out are always in demand, and are always being republished in attractive forms. A brief tale founded on the character of the famous Irish actress.

Smith, F. H.—Tom Grogan.

Trollope, Anthony.—The three clerks.

The love stories of three men in the English civil service, with three girls whose differences in character are strongly marked.

Woolston, C. F.—Anne.

Anne is a beautiful woman with a fine voice, who is also a woman of strong character.

Fourteen Days Adrift.

New York, June 13.—Rescued when almost dead from hunger and exposure after being fourteen days in a dory, Louis Vollet, thirty-three years old, a fisherman from the schooner Mimosa, of St. Malo, France, was brought into port yesterday on the Carmania, of the Cunard line, in from Liverpool. Vollet was just able to sit up for a few moments in the ship's hospital yesterday. His mind, almost wrecked by his terrible experience, fails him at times and he was unable to remember the name of his mate in the dory, who was swept overboard during the storm that drove them far from the schooner.

Mrs. Joseph Chamberlain, of High Bridge, has been visiting relatives in town for several days.

Plainfield, N. J., June 13, 1907.

Speaking of "monopolies" at Trenton, it looks as if Union county is on the outside in the division of money for road repairs received from automobile licenses. Out of a total of $55,855.85 it gets as its share the munificent cum of $176.09, only Cumberland and Hudson going below it. In view of the fact that Union spends thousands annually in the building and repair of the attractive roads so conducive to autoists the division seems unfair. Middlesex county gets $6,015.14 and Somerset $3,104.61.

"If Lewis Lawton had thought as much of the people of New Jersey as he says he thought of George J. Tobin, the Plainfield plumber," says the Trenton True-American, "he would have let that prison plumbing contract to F. S. Katzenbach & Co. at $12,000, instead of to Tobin at $24,000, and would have given the people the benefit of the $12,000 difference in his bid."

Reports from the interior indicate that the straw hat crop has gone to seed for the want of picking. Information from the same source declares the unseasonable weather is due to an early winter.

SUICIDE OR ACCIDENT.

Mystery In Death of Young Farmer Near Pluckemin.

The funeral of John Hoppock, twenty-two years old was held today and the body buried in the new cemetery in Somerville, after services conducted by Rev. Thomas D. Wesley, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Pluckemin. Just whether the young man committed suicide or met an accidental death is a matter that will probably never be determined. He lived with a farmer near Pluckemin, and Tuesday morning took a revolver and went back of the farm for the purpose of scaring the chickens from scratching up the corn that had recently been planted. Three shots were heard and after this Happock was seen working about the barn. Later on his lifeless body was found with a pistol wound in the head. County Physician Long viewed the remains and decided that the young man had taken his own life. Relatives, however, claim the shooting was accidental, declaring that Happock had probably been examing the barrel of the revolver when it exploded.

Raising Hospital Funds.

Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen, James Q. TenEyck and George Terrell have been appointed a committee to raise funds to build an addition to Somerset Hospital in Somerville and have sent out an urgent appeal to about one hundred of the prominent residents of Somerville and the county. It is said that the first two responses amounted to $1,000 from residents who do not wish to have their identity made known.

Fitz-Randolph—Griscom.

Miss Mary Clement Griscom, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David J. Griscom, and W. Sheppard Fitz-Randolph, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Fitz-Randolph, were married last night at the home of the bride in Piscataway. The wedding was largely attended by friends and relatives.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Frank Fletcher, former pastor of the bride and groom, at 7:30 o'clock. The house was most attractively decorated with flowers and plants in green and white.

The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Virginia Fitz-Randolph, as maid of honor; and Miss Edyth Vermeule, Belleville; Miss Elizabeth S. Pitman, Camden; Miss Fanny B. Giles, New Market; and Miss Elizabeth W. Clement, Woodbridge, as bridesmaids. The best man was Leonard G. Scheriber, Cincinnati, a classmate of the groom at Cornell University. The ushers were John Snyder, New York; James V. Schaefer, New York; Frank W. Clement, Woodbrige; and Robert Fitz-Randolph, brother of the groom. The wedding music was played by Nye B. Reardon, of Brooklyn.

The bride wore white mouseline satin over white silk taffeta, trimmed with princess lace, and wore a tulle veil. She carried bride roses. The maid of honor wore white net, with lace trimmings, and carried pink roses.

A reception followed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Fitz-Randolph left later on a trip to the South.

They will live in New York, where the groom is in business as a civil engineer. The bride received a large number of gifts.

Craig—Boice.

Miss Edith Frances Boice, daughter of Mrs. C. D. Boice, and Sidney Rae Craig, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Craig, were married at the home of the bride, on Jackson avenue, Dunellen, last evening. The wedding was very quiet, only immediate relatives being present.

The house was prettily decorated with palms, ferns and cut flowers. The ceremony was performed in the parlor, at 7 o'clock, by Rev. W. W. Casselberry, pastor of the bride. The latter was given away by her brother, Charles D. Boice. Miss Boice was gowned in white crepe de chine over white silk.

A reception followed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Craig will spend two weeks on a honeymoon trip. They will reside in a home already furnished on Dunellen avenue. The bride received a number of handsome gifts.

Mosher—Morse.

Miss Agnes P. Morse, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mary M. Morse, of the borough, and Edward Mosher, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Mosher, of Andover, N. Y., were married last night at 6 o'clock at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Walter C. Walker, 58 Jackson avenue. Rev. Joseph O. McKelvey, pastor of Warren chapel, performed the ceremony. The couple was unattended.

The bride was gowned in Loisine taffeta of Alice blue, and carried a bouquet of bride roses. After the ceremony, congratulations were offered and supper was served. The home was attractively decorated with roses and palms. There were guests present to the number of thirty, being the relatives of the couple. The bride received many gifts, including cut-glass, silver and furniture.

During the evening Mr. and Mrs. Mosher left on a bridal trip which will include Buffalo and Niagara Falls. After July 1 they will reside at Elizabeth. Both the bride and groom are well known here and are popular in a large circle of friends. Mr. Mosher is employed in the office of the county engineer at Elizabeth.

Trimmer-Haas.

Miss Annie Haas, daughter of John V. Haas, of Millington, widely known in this city, and Charles Trimmer, of Morristown, were married at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the home of the bride's father. Rev. Mr. Condit, of Newark, former pastor of the bride, performed the ceremony in the presence of about fifty guests.

The bride was gowned in white chiffon over white silk, and carried a shower bouquet of white roses and lillies-of-the-valley. The bridemaid was Miss Susie Haas, a sister of the bride, who was gowned in pink chiffon, and carried pink roses. The best man was Dr. Bace, of Newark.

The parlors were elaborately decorated with palms, ferns and daisies. The large hall, extending through the house, was also decorated with ferns and daisies. The decorations in the dining room were chiefly roses.

After the ceremony supper was served and later the couple left to enjoy a two weeks' wedding trip. They will reside at Morristown, where the groom is engaged in the grocery business. Among the invited guests were Mr. and Mrs. J. C. VanDyke and family, of East Fifth street, the bride being a niece of Mrs. Van Dyke, and Mrs. W. W. Warnock, of Craig place.

Annual Reception to Graduates.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

Faded silks may be restored to their natural color by immersing them in soapsuds, to which a little pearl ash has been added.

Marks made by scratching matches on the wall may be removed by rubbing lightly with a piece of cut lemon, then with a cloth dipped in whiting, and finally washed with warm water and soap.

To test water almost fill a clean pint bottle with it and add a half teaspoonful of granulated sugar. Cork tightly and keep in a warm place for two days. If at the end of that time the water has become cloudy or milky, it is unfit for domestic use.

If powdered sugar becomes lumpy take a common potato or nutmeg grater and grate the lumps as you would cheese. The old way of crushing it with a rolling pin is apt to leave a sticky mass.

One of the best methods for restoring matting that is pretty well worn is to give it a coat of white shellac. The matting should be taken from the floor and cleaned, relaying it carefully, then give it a coating of shellac. If the shellac wears off in places, wash the matting in hot soapy water, then go over it with warm water, and after it is thoroughly dry put on another coat of shellac. The coat of shellac will wear at least six months.

To make pure baking powder of the very best quality, take one pound of pure cream tartar, six ounces of tartaric acid, one pint of flour; mix well and sift not less than three times, place in tin cans and use as you would any other baking powder.

When kettles have become black from the coal in kitchen stoves, fill a medium sized box with sand and keep under the sink. When a kettle is taken off from the coal fire put it in the box of sand and turn it around and around a few times and it will soon become bright and clean without soiling the tables or the hands.

Where dishes are washed in the sink, stretch a piece of white rubber tubing, about two inches long, over the ends of the faucets, letting it extend about two inches below. This will prevent the breaking and nicking of china that is caused by striking them against the faucets.

To prevent shoes from making holes in the heels of stockings paste a piece of wash leather inside the heels of the shoes. This will also prevent the shoes from rubbing the feet.

ABOUT PEOPLE.

One of the most eloquent preachers of Wales is Rev. J. Paultos Jones. He has been blind since he was two years old, but was graduated with high honors at the University of Glasgow.

The Chamber of Deputies in France has decided to appoint a committee to arrange for the establishment of a national holiday in honor of Joan of Arc.

The Right Rev. Arthur Foley Ingram, Lord Bishop of London, will visit Washington this fall. The Episcopalians are planning a big reception for him.

Florida is one of the several States not represented at the Capitol at Washington with statues of its distinguished sons.

The members of the Philadelphia Council and the New York Board of Aldermen will cross bats on June 19.

The Duke of Abruzzi, now a visitor in this country, pronounces his name as though it were spelled "Ah-broot-zee" with the accent on the second syllable.

Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt is to navigate a thirty-foot crack racing yacht in the races at Newport this summer.

Arthur Pauline, a telegraph operator in Wichita, Kan., is credited with having made $15,000 in wheat speculations in the last five years.

Judge Craig Biddle, who has served for twenty-five years on the Philadelphia bench, has just celebrated his eighty-fourth birthday anniversary.

HINTS FOR THE HOME GARDNER.

Roses like a rich soil, so it would be well to spade in some well-rotted manure early in the spring.

Tuberose bulbs that are started in the house late in the month should not be set outdoors until the first of June.

Flowers and shrubbery in the front yard generally indicate that a cultured and prosperous farmer lives there.

A liittle lime stirred into the soil in which potted plants are growing will be beneficial at this time of the year.

An oil can makes an excellent watering pot for indoor plants. The water should be warm when applied.

Too much pot room is injurious to small plants, and if they are not doing well it would be a good plan to transplant them.

Poppies will grow as rapidly as weeds after they get started, and it is hard to imagine a more beautiful flower. The seed is cheap, too.

The appearance of the vegetable garden can be enhanced by planting a border of flowering plants along the side nearest the house.

Healthy plants are often ruined by the application of a fertilizer when they don't need it.

Examine the lawn carefully this spring, and if it is bare in spots, take immediate steps to replenish the grass.

TRAIN AND TRACK.

Surface cars on Manhattan Island do daily damage to persons and property in the average sum of $2,750.

The first application of the cable to the traction of street cars was made by Hallidie in San Francisco in 1873, who opened the Clay street cable line.

In all London has six underground electric railways completed, and five more are under construction and projected, and of the 600,000,000 persons carried annually on all her railways 258,000,000 are accomodated by these tunnel lines.

Luke Lee, seventy-five years old, of Horton, Kan., has been a locomotive engineer for forty-five years. He is the oldest engineer on the Rock Island system, but he still retains his position at the throttle of the engine which pulls the daily passenger train between Horton and Fairbury, Neb., a distance of 120 miles.

NEWS IN THE SUBURBS

SOUTH PLAINFIELD.

The Lehigh Valley Railroad Company's new bridge spanning the Susquehanna River at Towanda, Pa., has been completed and will be placed in service on June 16th. The new bridge is a double track steel structure on heavy concrete foundation. It eliminates a number of reverse curves, and enables the company to make better time with both passenger and freights trains, and permits of transportation of heavier tonnage than the old bridge. The new passenger station at Towanda has also been completed.

Arrangements have been completed for the entertainment to be held Monday night, June 24, in Washington Hall by the Minstrel Club.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Baptist church will hold a business meeting tomorrow night at the home of the president, Charles Jackson.

Alfred Mundy has taken a position with Frank Kellogg and is employed carting grain.

Alfred Springer has completed his sailing boat and used it yesterday for the first time.

The meeting of Washington Camp, No. 41, P. O. S. of A., will be held tonight.

"Phil." Smith, it is said, will soon join the Johnstown Tri-State League Club.

Big Vacation Rush Impends.

New York, June 13.—With their summer resort business less than fifty per cent of what it usually is at this time of year, the railroads, instead of complaining, are making preparations for the biggest rush of summer travel in their history. New Yorkers, while staying at home during the present unreasonable weather are laying plans to overwhelm all the places North, East and West during the months of July and August. Inquiries made by the railroads show that the bookings at cottages, boarding houses and hotels on Long Island in the Catskills, in the Adirondacks, at St. Lawrence points and, in fact, at all places where New Yorkers ever go are the heaviest ever known. That the crush will be greater than the roads can handle is the prediction of some of the managers, although in anticipation of the congestion all rolling stock fit for use is being put into shape.

Suit Against Stokes Fails.

New York, June 13.—Lucy Riley-Randolph's suit against W. E. D. Stokes to compel him to provide "handsome and liberal" support for her five-year-old son, William Edward, was dismissed yesterday in the Supreme Court in Flushing after the plaintiff had rested her case. The dismissal was made on the purely technical ground that the complaint was defective. Judge Jaycox gave no opinion as to the paternity of the boy for whose support and name his mother is fighting. He said her only recourse would be a suit for a specific amount which she herself had expended for the support of the child.

Dog, in Play, Fires Gun.

Boston, Mass., June 13.—Miss Ann G. Witherell, twenty-five years old, of Braintree, died at a Boston hospital last night as the result of a peculiar accident. Last Sunday, while Miss Witherell was visiting a sister, one of those present played with a pet dog, the animal chasing a baseball across the floor. In one of its attempts to seize the ball the dog collided with a gun which stood on a rack on the wall. The weapon fell to the floor and was discharged, the contents striking Miss Witherell in the head.

in the ledger from which names had been erased and other items dated a few days previously, showing the payments of large sums by the State to the Lawton firm. Mr. Backes made it known that in his mind there was at least the suspicion of a relation between the two sets of items, and he had apparently not let the matter drop at the close of yesterday's session, merely because he had failed to get a satisfactory explanation of it from either Lawton or his bookkeeper.

The session today is likely to be further enlivened by the employment of counsel by the contractors to prevent too close investigation of their books. They declare that they will appeal to the courts if necessary to keep the committee from delving into their accounts with individuals. Mr. Backes, for the committee, yesterday afternoon threatened the ejectment of a lawyer who protested in the interest of a client against the examination of his books.

Much of the morning session of the investigation was devoted to inquiry concerning the methods of the State Board of Assessors. Assessor Stephen J. Mecker, of Orange, was the first witness. He said that railroad property was assessed after inspections by the assessors and their engineers. He said that during the last twenty years the valuation of private property had been largely increased, possibly fifty per cent. He denied that during the same time the railroad assessments had been increased only two per cent.

After an altercation with Mr. Backes he read a statement showing that the assessed valuation of railroad main stem and franchises had increased from $135,556,724 in 1886 to $166,746,000 in 1906, a total of $31,189,576, or 34 per cent.

Naval Men Surely Lost.

Fort Monroe, Va., June 13.—Investigation yesterday leads almost certainly to the conclusion that the steam launch of the Battleship Minnesota which, with six midshipmen and five seamen on board, has been missing since shortly after midnight, yesterday morning, was run down by a passing steamer or tug. After an unremitting search, in which the entire fleet of war ships assembled here joined, Rear Admiral Evans notified the Navy Department this afternoon that he had abandoned hope of finding the missing men alive and that rigid investigation has thrown little light on the mystery.

Dr. Brooks Sees Comet.

Geneva, N. Y., June 13.—Dr. William R. Brooks, director of the Smith Observatory and Professor of Astronomy of Hobart College confirmed by observation yesterday the comet discovered by Professor Daniel at Princeton Observatory. Dr. Brooks found it yesterday morning in right ascension, 23 hours, 53 minutes and 10 seconds; declination south, 40 minutes. This gives a daily motion of half a degree in a northeasterly direction. The comet is in Constellation Cetus, in the eastern morning sky, and is rather a faint telescopic object.

Snowstorm in Virginia.

Richmond, Va., June 13.—A snow storm of some violence is reported to have occurred in the mountains contiguous to Fredericksburg Tuesday night. The storm raged for two hours the snow falling thick and fast as it struck the ground. The oldest residents cannot remember such an occurrence in their time. Light flurries of snow in other sections of the State, Tuesday night have been reported, but the storm was most severe in and around Winchester.

Killed by Falling Tree.

Asbury Park, June 13.—Good Enough Jackson, fifty-four years old, a well-to-do farmer of Green Grove, was instantly killed today while felling timber near his home. A heavy tree in falling, struck Jackson on the head and crushed him to the ground. His son, Archibald, rolled the piece of timber off his father's body and then summoned assistance.

PLANS APPROVED FOR JERSEY'S DEATH HOUSE.

Were Prepared by Architect George Poole and Follow the Structure at Sing Sing.

Trenton, June 13.—The State Board of Prison Inspectors yesterday approved of plans prepared by State Architect George E. Poole for a death house at the State Prison. In this structure prisoners convicted of capital crimes committed subsequent to March 1 last will be electrocuted instead of hanged, as has been the practice in New Jersey from the earliest days.

The building will be situated just inside the prison walls and adjacent to the Third street entrance, which is the only means of egress and ingress except the small front door used by pedestrians.

The house of death will not be an elaborate structure, but it will be substantial and secure in every particular. On the right of the Third street entrance there will be a building 42x28 feet for the electrical apparatus and plant, and adjoining this another structure 50x22 feet provided with steel cells for condemned men awaiting execution. The latter building will be of brick, one story in height. There will be six cells, 8x9 feet, with an enclosed corridor for the death watch. It will be fitted with a bathroom and other conveniences. The cellhouse itself will have a fifteen-foot ceiling and the cells will be eight feet high, the cell ceilings being of reinforced concrete slab, closed on three sides. The entire front of each cell will be of open steel work so that the inmates will at all times be in full view of the death watch. There will be no windows in the building, all the light coming from skylights.

The electrocution room in which the death penalty will actually be exacted will be 19x28 feet, and will be fitted up with a compartment in which the electric chair will be kept when not in use. The compartment will also have a switchboard, and in it the operator will be concealed at all times, so that no one but the expert who conducts the electrocution will actually know the identity of the person who turns on the death current. The only means of access to this secluded compartment is through the autopsy-room in the rear of the death chamber.

The signal to turn on the current is given by a mechanical device. In its general arrangement the death-house follows somewhat the plan adopted at Sing Sing.

HOLY CROSS MUSICALE.

Noted Soloists Will Contribute to the Program.

The second annual musicale and concert will be given by the choir of the Church of the Holy Cross Tuesday night in the parish house at 8:15. The choir will be assisted by several soloists of recognized ability. Mr. Schlich, organist and choirmaster, will present the men and boys in several choruses and glees, to be sung under his direction.

John Bland, of New York, a tenor of note, will sing several numbers. Miss Gertrude Lohrke, of East Orange, will also sing and Mrs. George A. Warner will assist with violin obligato, also violin solos. H. Raymond Loder will act as accompanist for the soloists. Tickets are now on sale by the members of the choir. The proceeds will be for the choir outing fund.

"New Idea" Dinner in Middlesex.

New Brunswick, June 13—Middlesex county is to have a "new idea" dinner. June 25 will probably be decided upon as the day, and invitations to deliver speeches will be extended Senator Everett Colby, of Essex; Senator George S. Silzer, of Middlesex, and Herman B. Walker, of Essex county. It will be on the same plan as the Peoples' Lobby dinner in Newark recently. Several men who were active in indorsing the candidacy of Alexander R. Fordyce as an independent Republican last fall are back of the plans for the dinner.

Funeral of Lewis F. Randolph.

The funeral service of Lewis F. Randolph, colored, was held from Bethel chapel, yesterday afternoon, at 2.30 o'clock. Rev. F. D Tildon, pastor of the chapel, officiated. The interment was in Hillside cemetery and the pall-bearers were William Osborn, Warren Davis, Frank Plummer and Charles Sanderson.

Reed; First vice regent, Mrs. Joseph J. Carter; second vice regent, Mrs. George W. Sanborn; secretary, Mrs. W. A. Ackerman; treasurer, Miss E. G. Nevins; registrar, Miss Louise Anderson; historian, Miss J. E. Demaray; board of management, Mrs. A. L. C. Hardwicke, Mrs. William C. Southwick, Miss Carolyn J. Otis.

Hand Almost Cut Off.

While working about his yard on East Third street, yesterday, Lewis Peterson narrowly escaped having his left hand cut off with a scythe. The sharp-bladed implement accidently fell on the hand, almost severing all four fingers and the thumb. Dr. J. B. Probasco was summoned and was obliged to take twenty stitches to close the gash.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning June 16.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

Topic—Who are slaves and who are free now?—Rom. viii. 12-23. (A temperance topic.)

The eighth chapter of Romans is one of the most comforting messages ever written by the great apostle to the gentiles. It is the chapter in the great Epistle to the Romans upon the subject of assurance and gives a number of ways by which we may be confident that we are no longer under condemnation and that nothing can "separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." In the passage selected for our study this assurance is based upon our attitude toward the sinful flesh and the Spirit. If our desire is to walk in the Spirit rather than after the flesh, then we may know that we are indeed the children of God and joint heirs with Christ Himself. Nor is this attitude toward God through the Spirit one of bondage. "Ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba, Father." The Christian is not under the bondage of the law of sin, but is the child of God and enjoys the freedom of children. The Christian, then, the adopted child of God, is the free man. His sins are pardoned, and he has power over them. The law has been kept for us by Christ, and we are no longer under its condemnation. This is the only true moral and spiritual freedom in the world, and if any one who is still in bondage to sin or to the law and wants the yoke of bondage removed the only sure and effective way of doing it is through the work of Jesus Christ as our atoning Saviour. The intemperate man who wants to be free indeed should come to Christ, who can and will make him free—give him freedom from both the guilt and the power of sin.

If therefore the Christian, the man who walks after the Spirit, is the free man, it follows that the man who walks after the flesh, who is held in grasp by vice and immorality, is the slave, and this is too sadly true. No greater slave ever existed in the world than the man who is in bondage and slavery of sin. He may think he is a free man, but let him try to give up his sinful habits and he will quickly realize how abject and certain his slavery is. Nor need we apply this truth to the drunkard alone. This is one of man's greatest vices, and its curse upon the human race has been most blighting, but there are other forms of sin around them even more loathsome than intemperance that hold man in its grasp. There are even greater sinners in the world than the army of poor weaklings who have fallen victims to the degrading taste for intoxicating drink. There are strong men, occupying high positions in life and honored and respected by society, who engage in vices too loathsome to mention. Theirs is not an occasional fall from the path of rectitude, but it is the studied purpose of their lives to bring about the ruination of the pure and innocent, simply to gratify their selfish and sinful desires. The intemperate man soon shows his lack of sobriety, but these moral lepers may spend a lifetime in following their vicious pursuits and even die with the world at large ignorant of their true characters, and they become slaves to their vices and are more degraded than the beasts of the field. Men are also slaves to the passionate desire for wealth regardless of how it is secured, slaves to ungodly ambitions, slaves to sinful pleasures of all kinds and characters. No man is a free man who is held in the clutch of any sin or vice. Yet all may become free in Jesus Christ. He can save "to the uttermost all who will come unto Him." As we realize the countless numbers of those who are slaves to sin in one form or another, let us hold up the Christ man faithfully before them, that they may find him and learn the great joy of living in the freedom "wherein Christ hath made us free."

"Seed Sowers."

Christian Endeavorers of the Japanese church of Honolulu have organized themselves into a band which they call "Seed Sowers," whose purpose is to distribute tracts throughout the city. There are twelve companies of these Seed Sowers. They preach in the streets, with a choir of singers, on Saturday evenings, and if any member of the band is unable to distribute tracts on the Sunday following he contributes a sum of money toward the expenses.—Ram's Horn.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

June 16: "Wasting Harvests." "The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few."—Matt. ix. 36-38.

By REV. WALTER J. YATES, D. D.

Passages for reference—Luke x. 1, 2; John iv. 35, 36; Eph. vi. 18, 19; Col. iv. 3; II Thess. iii. 1.

The perpetual mystery of nature which has held us all spellbound through this springtime, as it has held all before us through the ages, is the marvelous fertility of the soil. Fathomless mystery and continual delight to us are the seedtime and the harvesting. How things grow and why they grow, who can tell. But they do grow, and so we live. One seed sown and a hundred gathered. What increase! A few planters and a world of hungry ones fed. And all this result with such poor methods and so few workers. What a world this might be if only we had more Luther Burbanks to teach us how to make plants better and diligent workers to cure our dislike of work.

Greater still is the marvel in the world of men. A man plants a little truth, and behold it grows until it becomes a tree under which a multitude find shelter. An acorn dropped in the crevice of a rock may grow until the oak bursts the solid granite. A seed truth dropped into human society hardened by centuries of power into forms of oppression and cruelty will burst asunder the bands of custom and spring forth into liberty for the multitudes.

The ages have seen this marvel repeated over and over again. The whole life of human society depends on the continuance of this seedtime of truth and harvesting of righteousness, justice and mercy. The wonder never grows less with repetition how so much of human good can spring from so little of planting. Still more inexplicable is it that, seeing the abundance of the harvest, so few are found to labor in the world field as sowers.

We are somewhat fed by truth, but the crop is still sadly inadequate to the world's needs.

Perhaps more would go out as laborers if they would give a little consideration to the reasons for the growth of things and the certainty of good wages. Results in the world of men are no more matters of chance than in earth fields with corn and cotton.

Truth has a self evidencing power as surely as wheat has a germ that will sprout and make blade, ear and kernel. The human mind is receptive of truth and will respond to its presentation as readily as the earth nourishes the wheat grain and causes it to spring into growth and maturity.

Put with this fact of the self evidencing power of truth the other fact, so well expressed by Carlyle, that "man is the born enemy of lies," and we have all the conditions needed for abundant harvests of spiritual things in the soil of human souls.

Renewed attention can well be given the parable of Jesus of the sower and the soils. At the present time there is no lack of seed corn for spiritual planting. Precious it is, but abundant. Some still must fall on the footpaths and over into the highway where birds will eat it. Some still is scattered among thorns which grow more rankly than the good seed, and they will crowd the plants to death. Still there is light soil and some seed is wasted, but the good soil is wide in extent, and if only men would break up that which has long time lain fallow and overgrown by weeds and plant the good seed, what a harvest time we could have.

What think you? Is it worth while to make rather than waste harvests? If so, will you begin at once to sow and to pray also for more sowers? The Lord has need of harvests. He has need of laborers. Be one, will you?

Living In Christ.

Abiding in Christ does not mean that you must always be thinking about Christ. You are in a house, abiding in its inclosure or beneath its shelter, though you are not always thinking about the house itself. But you always know when you leave it.

A man may not always be thinking of his sweet home circle, but he and they may nevertheless be abiding in each other's love. And he knows instantly when any of them is in danger of passing out of the warm tropic of love into the arctic regions of separation.

So we may not always be sensible of the revealed presence of Christ; we may be occupied with many things of necessary duty, but as soon as the heart is disengaged it will become aware that He has been standing near all the while, and there will be a bright flash of recognition, a repetition of the psalmist's cry, "Thou art near, O Lord."

Ah, life of bliss, lived under the thought of His presence, as dwellers in Alpine valleys live beneath the solemn splendor of some grand, snow capped range of mountains!—Rev. F. B. Meyer.

Forgiveness For All.

That the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sin is evidenced by the simple fact that man is able in the divine strength to reform the evils of his life. As we succeed little by little in putting them away, so do we attain little by little unto the blessedness of divine forgiveness. We may know then that we are forgiven as we are enabled to do better. This is a sign of forgiveness. This is the sure proof of its presence. What greater satisfaction can we ask than this, knowing that the Lord will grant forgiveness unto all that seek it, having before us the definite way for the attainment of its blessedness and the sure sign of its accomplishment? In our spiritual inactivity we are all on the bed of the palsy, and to all of us it is said "Thou art forgiven our sins. The Lord says "Arise, take up thy bed and go unto thy house."—C. H. Mac[illegible]

"Let us pass, Bobbs!" I exclaimed, angrily, losing my astonishment in my anxiety to reach the house. "I'll see you again, Bobbs! It's the doctor, here for Miss Weston!"

"I know, sir," he panted, "and it's the doctor I want! She's gone, sir, and I'm afraid he's going, too. Come with me, for God's sake!"

"Do you mean she's dead, Bobbs?" I cried, as a great lump rose in my throat.

"Yes, oh, yes!" he almost screamed. "The doctor can't do her no good! She died some half hour ago, and he's dying, too, I tell you! Have you no heart, sir? Oh, bring the doctor to him, in God's name!"

"Can we drive?" I asked, suddenly, realizing the fellow's meaning and appreciating the uselessness of our going on to the house.

"No," he replied, "but it's only a step, sir. I'll show you the way. Oh, I thought you would never come, sir!"

We sprang out and, giving Bobbs the lantern, followed him through the snow to the side of the house on which Miss Weston's windows opened.

"He doesn't know she's gone yet," said Bobbs, as he trudged along, lighting our way as best he could. "But he knows it must be soon, and he's been waiting out here in the storm for over six hours."

We came to a tree, partly sheltered by some shrubbery around it, and there, leaning against its trunk was poor John Carney, tottering feebly for support and gazing fixedly at the window behind which lay the body of his loved one.

"It's Mr. Carney, sir," explained Bobbs, choking down a sob. "You might not know him, sir, he's changed so in the year and it's a long bit since you saw him last."

MacArdel made no move to go near him and we stood there, I in expectation and MacArdel with an air of professional scrutiny. Carney spoke, but without turning his head."

"I know you, Ware," he said slowly and painfully, raising his voice feebly to make it heard above the fury of the storm. "You have been good to Florence and so to me—and—I thank you. I can't say more than that, Ware, but my thanks are heartfelt."

He paused and seemed to choke for an instant before he resumed:

"You must pardon me, Ware, for all the trouble I've made you and for the worry that Florence has had to suffer, but I was too sure of myself when I thought I could frighten you away with the ghosts that Bobbs and I manufactured and the letters that I had him write you. No one knew we were here but Bobbs' good mother, and she's been more than a mother to me, Ware. You must never let her want for anything as long as she lives. She and Bobbs must be well provided for when I'm gone, Ware."

He stopped again and gasped heavily for breath, but soon he recovered himself and went on, though more feebly and with greater effort than before:

"I know I was foolish to do this, Ware, but at first I fancied I could stay here and keep out of sight of the authorities and then, when I needed exercise, we thought of the ghosts as a means of keeping people away and giving me more freedom."

He had not taken his eyes from the window in all this time and the snow was falling so heavily that we were covered thickly with its soft, fleecy mantle.

Again he began to speak while we stood as men entranced, but his voice was even weaker than before and it was with difficulty that we could make out all that he said.

"I'll be gone soon, Ware, and you must keep it all from the people and have me buried at once. You know there would be a panic if they knew, and yet there would be no danger in this climate. It's only when you live right in the midst of it, Ware, and have it on all sides of you all the time, as I did in Hawaii, trying to help those poor souls in their sufferings.

"There's no danger, Ware, to anyone and yet, if they'd found me I'd have been penned up somewhere like a wild beast, and I couldn't bear it. I know I was foolish over it, and that I probably could have bought my freedom in a way, but once we got settled here I wanted to stay in peace. You know we never bothered you with the ghosts after Florence came back, and I had Bobbs send you that one last note in a faint hope that you would go away again.

"Bobbs wrote to Annie for me, too, telling her to talk with Mrs. Bruce and try and persuade you to go, but she only begged to see me and insisted on keeping as near to me as she could. Of course, I could not see her, Ware, but she used to write me every day and leave the letters on the window sill for Chico to get after dark. I wasn't able to answer them, Ware, for I am perfectly helpless now, you know," and he changed his position enough to show us two arms swathed in bandages, "but God only knows what a comfort they were to me, and Bobbs or his mother got a word to her from me whenever they could."

He was panting noisily from the effort of his long exertion, and Bobbs made a [illegible]

would have him stop, but Carney motioned him away and began once more in faint, disjointed words:

"I mustn't stop now, Bobbs. I have more to say and my time is growing short."

He leaned heavily against the tree for support and paused as if summoning to his aid all his energy and all his courage, and then gasped on:

"Be good to Florence when she comes to you, Ware, and—God's—blessing—on you—both."

Suddenly, and with a muffled sob, he lunged forward and raised his poor distorted arms toward the window, which his gaze had never left for an instant. One of the nurses appeared and raised the sash to the top, letting the bitter wintry air rush in and fill the death chamber.

"It's the end," moaned Carney, in a scarcely audible tone. "It's the end, and yet the beginning, too. Oh! my God, be kind—be good to me now. I cannot wait—my Annie—I—am—coming — I — Ware — by — her — side — Ware — by — her — side — Ware — don't — forget. I — cannot — harm — her — now — I — Annie — my — precious — Our — Father — who — art — Amen — my Annie."

As we sprang to support him the light of the lantern flashed across his cruelly disfigured face and MacArdel muttered in my ear:

"Leprosy—poor devil, just as I thought, but what he said was true, Ware. There's no danger to anyone here."

We lowered him gently to the ground and the rapidly drifting snow received him in its soft enbrace and covered him over like a shroud.

Some hours later, when the house was quiet for the night and MacArdel had retired to his room, I called Bobbs into the dimly lighted library and said:

"It's late, I know, Bobbs, and we are all worn out in mind and body, but I want you to tell me the rest of this story before you go."

Queen Wilhelmina's Egotism.

The American impression of a poor little Wilhelmina cowering beneath the brutalities of the man she asked to marry her is extremely curious to those residents of The Hague who understand the sort of disposition for which the house of Orange is celebrated. For Wilhelmina is a true daughter of the house of Orange. The Queen's mother, the most obedient of parents, has proclaimed this more than once.

She is never forgetful of her own immense importance to Holland. When, five years ago, the Queen lay on that sick bed from which it seemed certain she would never rise, her Majesty's physician in ordinary, feeling the patient's pulse, declared that the crisis was over. "God," murmured the Queen in a faint whisper, "is very merciful to my people." The story may be invented, but it is said in German dailies to fit her Majesty's character like a glove.

A nature of this kind is not the material out of which the most submissive of spouses can be fashioned. Whether, as some French dailies say, Wilhelmina, in virtue of her sovereign rank, had to make the proposal of marriage to Prince Henry, or whether, as some German dailies tell us, her Majesty merely sent his Highness word that she was going to marry him, he was speedily involved in the same difficulties of prerogative which tend at times to strain the Queen's relations with the responsible rulers of her kingdom. Wilhelmina has exalted notions of her royal authority. She is said to interfere in a most personal way with the conduct of Dutch foreign relations. She looks upon the Dutch colonies as, in some sort, the private appanages of the house of Orange. Her prodigious personal popularity with every class of her subjects saves her from some of the consequences of her unconstitutional tendencies.—From Current Literature for June.

DIAMOND DUST.

The third game of the series between the old baseball rivals, the West Ends, of Somerville, and the nine from Flemington, will be played at West End Park, Somerville, on Saturday afternoon, and, as the Somerset nine has lost both of the previous contests, it will make a great effort to win the coming battle. If the day be fair doubtless a record-breaking crowd will be in attendance, as the rivalry between the two teams is so great that much interest is manifested in the outcome of the series. The Flemingtons will go to Somerville in a special train, accompanied by a band of about 300 rooters. The battery for the West Ends will be Braden and Torpey and Weaner and Brunner will be in the points for Flemington.

JUBILEE COMMITTEE, W. R. C., GIVES AN ENTERTAINMENT.

Proceeds Will Be Used For Celebration Later in the Year.

Under the auspices of the Jubilee Committee from the Women's Relief Corps, an excellent entertainment was given in G. A. R. Hall, last night, to raise funds for the jubilee celebration of the organization which occurs later in the year.

The entertainment opened with two selections by Dr. J. F. Berg's orchestra, after which William Crittenden, a Civil War veteran, gave a brief talk in which he described some interesting incidents of his own personal observation.

Mrs. John Manley sang several solos, Miss May Smith gave a recitation, "The Swing," and Miss Virginia Devine rendered a piano solo. Two more selections by the orchestra were followed with a recitation, "The Last Hymn or the Shipwreck," by Miss Try Mattox; two soprano solos, "Heart of Gold," and "Silver Threads Among the Gold," Miss May Smith; selections by a quartette of brass horns, and a selection by the orchestra. After refreshments were served the orchestra played for dancing. The committee in charge of the affair, of which Mrs. Sadie Baglin is the chairman, will make a report at the meeting of the Women's Relief Corps tomorrow night, when arrangements will be made to attend the State convention at Ocean City on June 27 and 28.

SALVATION ARMY HAS "INDUSTRIAL" STORE HERE.

Branch of the Home at Newark to Help the Poor to Get Articles at a Nominal Sum.

The Salvation Army Industrial Home, of New Jersey, with headquarters at Newark, has opened one of its industrial stores in this city, instead of taking the goods given to the Army to the larger cities. In this way the poor of Plainfield are given the opportunity of securing clothing and other useful articles at a nominal sum. A small charge is made as it has been found that the poor, when able, prefer to pay a little something for the goods.

The money from the sale of these goods, helps the Army to meet current expenses, and the officers solicit old clothing, newspapers, magazines, etc. A postal addressed to 409 East Third street, Plainfield, will bring the wagon to any place. W. S. Green is the manager of this work.

Recently, charges were preferred by local junkmen in this city against Frederick Joy, a driver on one of the wagons sent out by the Industrial Home, who they claim interferes with their business. They charge that on April 26 last he sold some of the articles of clothing and other material collected in the name of charity. Henry P. Urschell, manager of the main office, Newark, denies the charge, claiming that Joy was in East Orange on the date named. The Army has employed counsel and will fight the action brought against them.

Constable Ambrose Mantz, of Warren township, who was fine $100 on the same charge, will appeal. Deputy Sheriff Anderson is awaiting the result of an appeal. He was fined $300 and given ninety days in the county jail. He is on parole in the custody of his counsel.

Thought House Was On Fire.

A still alarm called the fire department to the home of Harry Johnson, at 1220 Watchung avenue, at 8:25 this morning, the family believing the house to be on fire. An investigation proved that a servant had been burning a lot of paper in the furnace and a back draught had filled the upper part of the house with smoke. Chief Doane quickly discovered the cause of the trouble and in a few minutes the house was cleared of the smoke. There was no damage.

ACT MAKES A HIT.

Miss Ward and Her "Dolls" Get Four Curtain Calls.

Large audiences at the New Plainfield theatre, yesterday afternoon and night, went in raptures over the act presented by Miss May Ward and her eight "Dresden Dolls" in connection with the big vaudeville bill on all this week. It is without doubt the most pleasing production of the kind that has ever been seen in the city and at the finish last night Miss Ward was given four curtain calls. Even then she had a hard time getting away. Beside the eight "cute little dolls" who assist Miss Ward in her singing and dancing, the act has three changes of scenery and sufficient electrical effects for an ordinary musical comedy.

Bedini and Arthur, the comedy jugglers, are also big "hits" on the bill and any one of the six others are entitled to the caption of "headliner."

GHOSTS GUARDING RICH SILVER MINE

MEXICANS ARE CONVINCED THAT THE FAMOUS MUERTA IS HAUNTED.

STRANGE RUMBLINGS HEARD

Nervy American Gets Title to Property But Men He Takes with Him Refuse to Remain in Spooky Shaft.

Marfa, Tex.—Tom Borgus came in from the Chinati mountains, 60 miles southwest of here, the other day and laid in enough camp supplies to run him and his men several weeks. He is trying to reopen the famous Muerta mine, which is said to be haunted. The mine is the terror of the Mexicans of the upper portion of the Rio Grande border and they cannot be induced to visit the locality where it is situated, much less enter its dark and grewsome shaft.

Borgus is an old mining man. He has prospected all over the west and southwest and in many mining districts of Mexico. He was in Chihuahua a few months ago when the story of the Muerta mine was told to him by a Mexican who was down there from Presidio del Norte. Borgus made made up his mind to take hold of the property. He came to Marfa and had no trouble in obtaining title to the mine. He spent some time trying to organize a working force among the Mexicans of this section. Not a man could be found who was willing to go with Borgus to the mine and help him work it.

Finally Borgus went over into New Mexico and employed 25 Mexicans to work in the mine. He said nothing to them about the shaft and underground workings being haunted. Mexicans remarked while employed in this work that they heard strange rumblings which seemed to come from the interior of the mountain. Borgus laughed away their fears and told

In less than a week the whole body of laborers were in Marfa again. They had deserted their work despite the vehement objections of Borgus. When questioned as to the cause of their quitting the job the Mexicans shruged their shoulders and answered:

"Spirits!"

The leader of the gang of Mexicans told a thrilling story of the adventures of the men. He said that the shaft is about 100 feet deep and at its bottom a shaft or tunnel extended to a chamber of considerable size from which it appears a considerable quantity had been removed at some period in the history of the property. This is evident from the fact that a large pile of rich silver ore was found at the far end of the chamber.

Soon after their arrival at the mine Borgus set the men to work cleaning out the shaft and straightening up the decaying timbers. Some of the them the noises were only the echoes of the sounds from their own picks.

When the shaft was cleaned an exploration of the tunnel and chamber was made. Borgus set the men to work carrying the ore which was in the chamber to the surface. Shortly after they started in on this the skeleton of a man was uncovered from the rubbish. This grewsome sight unnerved the superstitious Mexicans and a few minutes later when a sound which seemed to come from under their very feet was heard and was accompanied by a strong gust of wind that extinguished the lights every man of them dropped his tools and fled in terrror out of the chamber and up the ladder in the shaft to the open air above.

Borgus was at the surface and witnessed the exit of the men with no little dismay. He could not induce them to return to work and despite his entreaties they all left the place and came to Marfa.

The ancient mining records on file in the archives of the state of Coahulla, Mexico, at Saltillo, are said to show that the Muerta mine was operated by the Spaniards more than a century ago. It was abandoned on account of the mysterious and weird demonstrations that were said to have occurred in the underground workings.

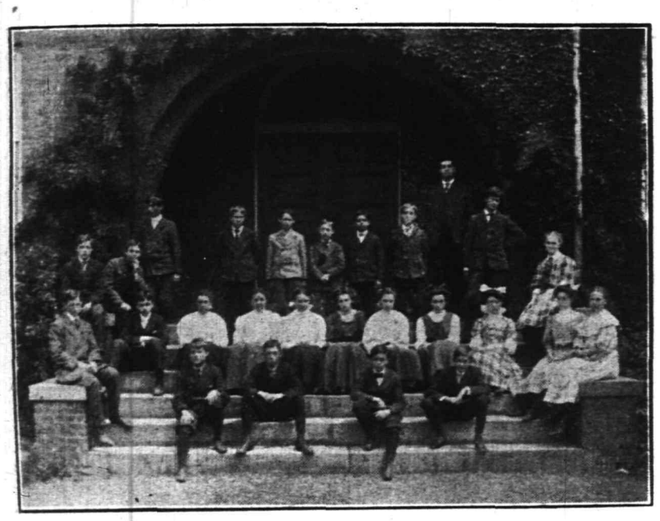
'PLAINS SCHOOL CLOSING

Senior Class of Grammar Department Accorded Graduating Exercises.

DR. MAXSON SPEAKS

Dwells On the Opportunities of the Present Day For a Complete Education.

Commencement exercises of the Scotch Plains Grammar School were held last night in the auditorium room of the Baptist church. The class was accorded the same reception as the High School graduates of the past, before the Board of Education entered into the arrangement with the Plainfield Board, by which the High School course is to be taken at the Plainfield High School. The church was filled with parents and friends.



Senior Class of Scotch Plains Grammar School, 1907.

The class of '07 took entire charge of the arrangements, under the direction of Principal Hendrickson. As hosts they could not be excelled, the church presenting a pretty appearance, being tastefully trimmed with flowers and ferns, white and green predominating. The music, which was one of the features especially enjoyed, was furnished by the school orchestra. An excellent program was rendered and enjoyed by all, the several essays all being exceptionally good. The speaker of the evening was Dr. Henry M. Maxson, superintendent of the Plainfield schools. He gave a learned as well as helpful address on the subject, "What Ought We To Expect a School to Give a Child?"

The speaker dwelt upon the opportunities of the present day for an education, and what it means to the scholars. He said the old masters would answer the question in one word, "knowledge," but the present day demanded that a boy or girl going out into the real battle of life needed "power, culture and efficiency." Some of the qualities were developed when the child began life in the primary department, but the three were not developed until the scholar had passed through the High School and had received his reward by being presented with the coveted diploma. The present age demands men who can think and act in the smallest space of time. These are the ones who succeed in the world today. For this reason power is one of the necessary attributes for a successful life.

Close observation is another thing that should be cultivated in the child; judgment is another, as one must be able to see foundation facts clearly and arrive at right conclusions to make a success in the world. There are really four "R's" in the education of today, the last one being "Reason." The teacher can do much toward developing the child but to make the education of the child a success they must meet with the hearty co-operation of the parents. The bread and butter side of life only consumes about one-third of a man's time. For this reason the scholar should develope culture, so as to be able to meet the world in all ways. In closing, Mr. Maxson said "I appeal to you as parents, to give every child who goes through your Grammar School a chance to take the High School course, and in this way prepare themselves to take their place in the world, as the world is broader today than it was a generation ago and the child needs better preparation to go out into life."

At the close of the address the class received their certificates and the evening's program was brought to a close with a selection by the orchestra.

This program was followed during

TOWNSHIP OFFICIALS GET AFTER THE BOROUGH

DON'T LIKE THE IDEA OF SEWER BEDS ON THE VAIL FARM.

The members of the North Plainfield Township Committee have placed the stamp of disapproval on the tentative plans of officials in the borough to locate and establish sewer beds in the township. At a meeting of the committee, yesterday, it was unanimously decided to use all efforts to prevent the establishing of such beds in the township, and the proposition was denounced in emphatic terms.

There has been considerable talk of locating sewer beds on the Abram Vail farm at the lower end of the township, an option on the land being secured for the borough by a real estate agent. Afterward when Mr. Vail discovered the purposes for which his land was desired, he declared that he would not recognize the option given and that rather than sell the land for such purposes he would stand suit. Yesterday's action of the Township Committee tends to support Mr. Vail in his position.

Other options on land in the vicinity of the Vail farm were secured, but the one obtained from Mr. Vail was considered the most important as the property contains a great many acres of land and was considered the best location.

BARBERS WANT MORE TIME TO THEMSELVES

JOURNEYMEN AGITATE FOR BI-WEEKLY DAY OFF AND HOLIDAYS.

The journeymen barbers of this city are agitating for a more satisfactory schedule of working hours. They have laid their demands before the bosses, who will pass on them next week. The men have a union.

The changes asked for embrace a day off every two weeks and all holidays. The men get no day off, outside of Sunday, now, and they say their time off is offset by their long hours. They are willing to work until 12 o'clock the night before a holiday.

As a balance to the new order of things for the bosses, the journeymen suggest that the price of a haircut be raised to twenty-five cents. They say they will support the bosses in that move.

The men met with the bosses last night to lay the changes before the latter. The bosses will meet to consider them next Thursday.

BRIDE FROM OVERSEA.

Miss Hart Comes From England to Wed Walter S. Lucas.

Miss Lilian Hart, of London, England, became the bride of Walter S. Lucas, of 110 East Fifth street, at the residence of Rev. E. Vicars Stevenson, rector of Grace Protestant Episcopal church, this morning, at 9 o'clock. The wedding was very quiet, only the necessary witnesses being present.

Miss Hart came to this country to wed Mr. Lucas, who is a native of London, and who was affianced to her at the time he came to this country a year ago. She arrived on the Adriatic last night. Mr. and Mrs. Lucas left immediately after the ceremony for a short honeymoon trip. They will live at 110 East Fifth street. The groom is associated with Dr. M. O'M. Knott in business.

LARGE TOURING CAR CRASHES INTO RUNABOUT

OCCUPANTS OF RIG THROWN OUT BUT ESCAPE INJURY,

A large touring car, owned and driven by T. C. Rhoades, of New York, who was accompanied by three women, collided with William Newman's runabout at Park avenue and Oak Tree road at 10:30 o'clock, last night. Mr. Newman and Miss Clara Batch, of New York, who was riding with him, were both thrown out, but escaped uninjured. Miss Batch suffered greatly from shock and became hysterical. She was finally brought back to Plainfield, where she took the 11:28 train to New York. Mr. Newman also suffered from shock.

Mr. Newman and Miss Batch were driving toward Metuchen and when they reached Oak Tree they noticed the automobile coming toward them. Mr. Newman turned out as far as possibl,e but, as Mr. Rhoades explained afterward the steering gear on his machine did not work properly and he was unable to make a short turn.

The front of his machine struck the hind wheel of the runabout, breaking the axle and throwing the occupants into the gutter. Mr. Rhoades stopped his auto as quickly as possible and ran to the assistance of Mr. Newman and Miss Batch, while the women folks also helped to care for the latter, who was more frightened than anything else.

Mr. Rhoades promptly offered to stand for all damages and any expense caused by the accident, claiming that it was his fault. He gave Mr. Newman his card and said that he would hear from him soon. The auto was not damaged.

DR. PARSONS TALKS ON TEMPERANCE REFORMS

SUBJECT OF AN INTERESTING DISCOURSE BEFORE THE W. C. T. U.

"My General Vision of the Work of Temperance Reform East and West," was the subject of an interesting talk given by Rev. Dr. C. W. Parsons at a W. C. T. U. parlor meeting held at his home on Park place, last night. Dr. Parsons is especially well fitted to speak on temperance because of his many large pastorates in various parts of the country and he related many incidents that came under his personal observation in the different States in which he has lived, especially in his pastoral work.

He expressed great joy over the progress of the local option law, West and South, and felt sorry that it was not meeting with equal success in New Jersey. He assured the women of his hearty co-operation with them in their fight for the cause of temperance.

Dr. Parsons, in speaking of local option throughout the country, said that there are 30,000,000 people in the United States living under the provisions of this law, including three-fourths of the counties of Virginia. He also cited a peculiar fact that Bourbon County, Kentucky, is among the places in the country that are "dry."

The doctor also told of the great fight made in Portland, Maine, and in fact throughout that whole State for prohibition, and how a sheriff, who permitted seventy saloons to exist on the quiet was turned out of office and an honest official was chosen in his place. Dr. Parsons said that he was convinced that prohibition will not prohibit unless the people want it to. However, he expressed the belief that there are hundreds of small places throughout Maine and other parts of the country working under prohibition and local option that are far better off than New Jersey. This, he said, was especially true in Kansas, where the residents are continually fighting against intemperance.

Dr. Parsons said that there are great hopes for further progress in temperance through the breaking down of political party lines and a united fight against the saloon. He said that the evil of intemperance could never be abolished through the efforts of any one political party, but that there must be a union of forces from all parties. In this way great good can be accomplished.

A silver offering was received at the meeting for the local work, and after Dr. Parsons' address, refreshments were served and a social time enjoyed.

Mayor Fisk Will Preside.

The annual commencement exercises of the Plainfield Business College will be held Tuesday night at the college on East Front street. Mayor Charles J. Fisk has been asked to preside at the exercises and William L. Saunders, of the borough, will make the address of the evening.

VAIL JURY IS STILL OUT

Verdict Had Not Been Reached at Noon After All-Night Session.

MRS. VAIL TESTIFIES

Accused Man Also Takes the Stand and Declares Hummell's Stories to Be False.

The case against Charles T. Vail, accused of burning the Valley postoffice building last February, went to the jury yesterday afternoon. The evidence was all in by noon, and the lawyers took up the afternoon in summing up their cases.

Many witnesses were called in the rebuttal to show that Joseph Hummell, who made a confession implicating Vail, who was then postmaster, was perfectly sober when he came to Flebington upon the day he gave to Prosecutor Large a statement in which he said he fired the building under Vail's influence and direction.

Mrs. Charles T. Vail, the defendant's wife, testified that she was in this city at the time of the fire with her husband. She was here, so her children could go to school here, she said.

Charles T. Vail, the defendant, said he had lived at Valley in the neighborhood of eight years. Mr. Vail said his memory was bad as to dates and slow to act since a trolley accident in which he had been hurt.

Vail said that Hummell's statements implicating him in the destruction of the store building were false. He denied telling Hummell that he was going to sell the property to a woman whom "he had the dead wood on."

Hummell's statements that he placed waste back of the counter, tore off the board and unfastened the postoffice cabinet, witness said, were also absolutely untrue. He said there were no screws or hooks on the cabinet at any time. He declared he never ordered Hummell to place oil back of the counter nor did he do it himself. Mr. Vail said there was a little oil on the floor, but this was caused by drippings from cans that were filled.

Witness said there was not a word of truth in Hummell's statement that he had told him he should go for water and trip and fall. It was positively untrue that he told Hummell to burn his clothes, the defendant said, and he never mentioned to Hummell to write him a letter.

Former Senator Gebhardt closed his direct examination by having the witness say that he did not counsel, aid or procure the burning of the building or give Hummell instructions to get out of the wagons or postoffice cabinet.

PROVED ALIBIS.

Specific Counts Against Salvation Army Collector Fall to Ground.

The two complaints against Fred Joy, employed by the Salvation Amy , brought by Max Michaelson and Benjamin Epstein, junk dealers, in an effort to check the Army in alleged violation of the junk ordinance, fell to the ground in the city court this morning. Joy proved an alibi in both cases.

The complaints alleged that he sold junk in this city on two days named. Joy, by his testimony, supported by officers of the Industrial Home of the Army in Newark, and route cards used by the Army junk wagons, proved to the satisfactioin of Judge Runyon that he was not in the city on the days cited. In dismissing the complaints, Judge Runyon said it was to be understood that he did not pass on the question of the Salvation Army's junk dealings or its right to carry on any collection business here. The cases took up about an hour and a half. G. W. V. Moy appeared for Joy and W. L. Hetfield, Sr., represented the junkmen.

Estil's agency.

Fined For Shooting Revolver.

Tony Sandi was fined $10 in the city court this morning for shooting a revolver on Belvidere avenue at 9:30 o'clock last night. The shot was heard by Sergeant Overbaugh, who was walking in the neighborhood. He arrested Sandi, who had been drinking. The revolver was found in the road. Sandi told Judge Runyon he shot the revolver off because he thought a dog was coming at him.

SUSTAINED IN FIRST APPEAL FROM HIS COURT

JUDGE NEWCORN'S DECISION IN HAND-GOULD ACTION UPHELD.

In an opinion just handed down by the Supreme Court, District Court Judge William Newcorn has been sustained in the first appeal taken from his court. The action carried up was that of Hezekiah Hand against Charles Gould.

The case, tried in the District Court last winter, was an action of replevin, in which Walter L. Hetfield, Sr., was the real plaintiff, through Hezekiah Hand as sergeant-at-arms of the District Court, appeared as plaintiff on the record. Mr. Hetfield, as counsellor at law, had rendered legal services to John Entwistle, who promised to pay his fees and stated that he had personal property sufficient to make him responsible for the same. After Entwistle had neglected, and finally refused, to pay the fees agreed upon and had left the State, leaving his goods behind him, Mr. Hetfield issued an attachment against the goods for the amount of his bill. Hand made a levy upon the goods under that attachment. When the attachment was executed, the goods were in the possession of Gould, who stated that they had been stored with him by Entwistle. When the officer afterwards undertook to sell under the attachment he was refused admittance to the premises, by Gould, who then claimed that he had purchased the goods of Entwistle before the levy made under the attachment. Mr. Hetfield then secured the writ of replevin in the name of Hand, to test the right of Gould to the goods in question. In this suit he was represented by Codington & Swackhamer, while Berkeley C. Austin, of Jersey City, appeared for the defendant. A judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff and Mr. Gould, through his attorney, immediately appealed the case to the Supreme Court, alleging that the judgment was illegal and should be set aside. The cause was argued at the last term of the Supreme Court and an opinion has just been handed down by the Supreme Court, which sustains the judgment rendered by Judge Newcorn in the District Court.

THE INVESTIGATION OVER

State Probers to Meet Now to Prepare Report to the House.

TOBIN LAST WITNESS

Readily Answered All Questions—Secured a Total of $57,000 From Contractor Lawton.

The Assembly Investigating Committee has finished its work unless the Legislature, which will meet next Tuesday, decides to continue it in the work it has begun or augments it by the appointment of a committee of Senators to sit with it.

The announcement that the committee was through was made by its counsel, John H. Backes, at the opening of yesterday's session, at which only two members, Messrs. Van Blarcom and Barber, were present. The members of the committee will at once begin a series of conferences with Mr. Backes in the matter of preparing the report, which will be submitted to the Legislature next Tuesday, on which will probaly depend the continuance or discontinuance of the probe into the State departments. It is not known yet whether one report will be made by the entire committee or whether the minornity will make a separate report.

Mr. Barber said yesterday that he could not say what action the minority would take until he had had a conference with his fellow committeeman, Mr. Gibbs.

As far as it has gone the Hahn committee has dug up a number of matters that have put the administration on the uneasy seat. The head of the State Banking Department, depositing the funds of his department in banks with which he was connected in a business way, and where they did not draw interest; disclosing of the State Fish and Game Commission, resulting in the resignation of Commissioner Percy H. Johnson; the inactivity of the State Board of Arbitration, to whose members the State has been paying large salaries for fifteen years; the methods of the State Board of Assessors; the suggestion of graft in State building operations as shown in the "surviving" books of the "State contractor," Lewis Lawton, are among the matters that will likely receive special attention in the report which the committee will make to the Legislature.

It is expected that the report will make several drastic recommendations for new laws to remedy the evils that have been discovered.

George J. Tobin, "the State plumber," was the only witness examined yesterday. He had abandoned all thought of defying the committee and was evidently willing to tell what he knew. He made one of the best witnesses of the investigation. He said he had done plumbing work for the State either directly with State officials or indirectly through Contractor Lawton, the man who says he burned his books, since 1902. He had been paid about $57,000. He believed he was introduced to Lawton by George Poole, the State House architect. Lawton would tell him to go ahead and do certain work. He did not know whether any one bid on the various jobs in competition with him. Lawton arranged all that.

Sometimes the contractor would tell him that he had been the lowest bidder and he would do the work, but often nothing was said. He remembered Lawton told him about the State prison bid. He said Katzenbach had agreed to bid $12,000. Tobin told him that was absurd and that he would do it for $23,000. A few days later Lawton informed him that Katzenbach would do the work for $11,000, and asked Tobin if he could not do it for $20,000. He said he could, and got the job. He did not know why Lawton had practically given him $9,000. He only knew he got it and kept it.

Pauli was the architect. He received requests from time to time from Lawton to do certain work and he would go on. He very rarely made a contract with him and he did not know whether he was really in competition with other people or not. He considered Lawton a favored bidder, who got about what he pleased from the State, and he was glad to know him and get business from him. Occasionally he would get a job in the State House outside Lawton. He had recently completed some plumbing work in the various offices of the State Department.

State Architect Poole asked Tobin to give him an estimate on the job. He said he would do it for $1,617. He got the work, but made no contract. There was no other bidder and he did not suppose there was any competition. Poole asked him for the estimate and he gave it to him. That was all there was to it. He charged the State the regular

SHORT TALKS BY L. T. COOPER.

ALL WORN OUT.

This is the time of year for the "all worn out" feeling. You hear it everywhere. "I'm all worn out." Did you ever stop to think what it means? Well, it means just this; 'my liver is dull and not working properly, my stomach is taking too much food which it is'nt digesting properly, I'm all clogged up from being indoors with so little fresh air all winter long, and my body is full of impurities. In consequence I'm dull, half feverish and tired all the time.' That is what 'all worn out' really means. Take a tablespoonful of Cooper's New Discovery three times a day for two weeks and the 'all worn out' feeling will certainly leave.

MR. JOHN BURGER.

Mr. Burger was 'all worn out' once. "For some weeks I suffered from an affection of the stomach that seemed to wear me out completely. My system was run down, my bowels constipated, I had dull headaches and although I was not sick enough to go to bed I did not have ambition to stir around. I read of Cooper's New Discovery and began using it. I am glad to say that two bottles put me on my feet and relieved every symptom of my trouble. It is one of the best system tonics I have ever heard of." John Burger, 1119 Hopkins St., Cincinnati, O.

We sell the famous Cooper remedies.

—The Watchung Stone Company is now delivering crushed stone to the city in such quantities and sizes as Street Commissioner Gavett desires, the bond between the city and company having been executed and approved.

—As yet the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital has not made a permanent selection of a house physician. Dr. Anthony, of Park avenue, who formerly held the position, is assisting in the work at the institution.

The Boys' Mission Band, of Trinity Reformed church, will hold its last meeting for the season on Friday night, June 28.

It is said that all excursions to Asbury Park this summer will leave Plainfield at 8.15 o'clock in the morning, the time being considered preferable on account of the heavy passenger traffic about 8 o'clock.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

DIAMOND DUST.

The Princeton College baseball team has elected Edward H. W. Harlan, of Belair, Md., captain for next year's nine.

Lemuel S. Hillman, of Mount Vernon, N. Y., has been chosen captain of the Colgate baseball team for next season.

The Raritans, of Perth Amboy, who play the Clinton Avenues on Crescent Oval, tomorrow, defeated Scotch Plains last season in a hard-fought game. It is a fast aggregation and will make the local team hustle to win.

Several Plainfielders who witnessed the New York-Detroit game at American League Park, Wednesday, were greatly disgusted over the exhibition of the Highlanders. Many people are beginning to think that Manager Griffith's aggregation is a joke, and an expensive one at that.

The Giants have been running against some bad weather in the West and have not had an opportunity to regain any of their lost ground.

Before the season is over "Phil." Smith will have played in nearly every baseball league in the East, outside of the major organizations, if he continues to change. The latest [illegible] town, of the Tri-State League.

Princeton has been playing a great game during the past few weeks. On Wednesday the Tigers whitewashed Pennsylvania by a score of 6 to 0, and Drewes, the second pitcher, was in the box.

The Brown University team still holds the record for college teams this season with not a single defeat. Tift, the star boxman, has been doing exceptional work.

Tomorrow the amateur league games will include Y. M. C. A. at Scotch Plains and Dunellen at Bound Brook. It is possible that Peacock may pitch for Dunellen, if he can leave Princeton in time.

After this week Walter Nelson expects to be with the Y. M. C. A. team every Saturday.

GOLF.

The executive committee of the Eastern Professional Association met in New York on Wednesday and decided to hold the professional tournament during the first and second weeks of August.

C. B. Morgan is devoting more time than ever to the game of golf and his scores are generally low. He intends to take part in a number of tournaments this season.

The New Jersey State Golf Association has just issued its first year book. The executive committee comprises the following: President, Leighton Calkins; secretary and treasurer, J. Whitney Baker; chairman tournament committee, E. N. Todd; chairman handicap committee, M. D. W. Thurston; Hon. J. W. Griggs and Percy Jackson. The following clubs are members of the association: Arsdale Golf Club, Baltusrol Golf Club, Cape May Golf Club, Canoe Brook Country Club, Colonia Golf Club, Country Club of Atlantic City; Country Club, of Lakewood; Englewood Golf Club, Essex County Country Club, Forest Hill Golf Club, Glen Ridge Golf Club, Hackensack Golf Club, Montclair Golf Club, Morris County Golf Club, North Jersey Country Club, Plainfield Country Club, Ridgewood Golf Club, Roseville Golf Club, South Orange Field Club, Suburban Club, of Elizabeth; Westfield Golf Club and Yontakah Country Club. The entire control and management of the association's affairs are invested in the executive committee, there being no constitution or by-laws.

With favorable weather conditions there should be an unusually large field out at the Plainfield Country Club tomorrow, when the open one-day tournament will be held under the auspices of the club. As the course is in fine condition it is expected that there will be some record scores, and possibly the record of the couse may be broken.

On account of the open tournament at the Plainfield Country Club tomorrow there will be no club competitions on the course to interfere with the tournament. All scheduled events will go over one week.

The weekly competitions for the President's Golf Club and Hydewood Park cups will be the attractions at the Park Golf Club, tomorrow. Each week brings out a large field and the competitions are growing more exciting as the season progresses.

The event at the Westfield Golf Club tomorrow will be handicap match play for the June cup for those who qualified on the first Saturday in the month.

Plainfield, N. J., June 14, 1907.

Governor Stokes yesterday signed the bill which makes "Good Friday" a legal holiday in New Jersey. This day has been observed as a holiday by some of the public schools of the State, and courts have been known to decline to sit upon that day. The signing of this bill will mean that next year banks and public buildings will be closed on Good Friday and that the schools will also be closed. It is not expected that commercial institutions will observe the day as a holiday. The bill was introduced by Senator Minturn and is known as Senate No. 291.

Over 2,000 Soda Tickets Sold.

Thus far L. W. Randolph, the West Front street druggist, has disposed of over 2,000 soda tickets for tomorrow's special sale at his soda fountain and he is looking forward to a big rush throughout the day. All money received from the sale of soda water at the fountain tomorrow will be given to the building fund of Faith chapel, it being Mr. Randolph's method of contributing toward this improvement. The novel plan has proved a great success so far as the sale of tickets is concerned. However, it will not be necessary to purchase tickets for soda to help swell the fund.

Sewer Work Progressing.

Peter J. Morgan, the sewer contractor, now doing work in this city, has sub-let to the Dunellen Concrete Block Company, the contract to build a well on the line of the sewer being installed in the southside of the city. The pump for the station to be located on Randolph road has arrived and Warren B. Travell, the contractor, expects to start the work of installing it soon.

VAUDEVILLE BASEBALL FOR THE HOSPITAL

DISGUISED GAME AND A BRIGHT SMILE; BOTH TEAMS WON.

That a baseball game is necessarily confined to eighteen players was conclusively disproved at Crescent Oval yesterday afternoon. Likewise, that two teams cannot win the same game was punctured and laid away with the annals of the Ananias Club. The ball team of the vaudevill company and Manager Bill Counihan's theatre nine played a game in which everybody on the sidelines took part, and which was won decisively by both teams. Nobody knows the score.

The game was played for the benefit of Muhlenberg Hispital. There was a suspicion before it started that the nines wanted to play more for love of the game than for love of sweet charity, but the athletes disproved that. It stands to reason that no one would treat anything he loved the way these teams treated baseball. Charity covers a lot of sins and will probably stand for that game, but it's an awful tax on the mantle.

The vaudevilles came out in makeup. Pleased with the effect, they lost no time in putting make-up on the game. They did a good job. Nobody would have recognized it as baseball. Sometimes there was a faint glimmer of something that seemed to belong in the diamond, but mostly the busy athletes seemed struggling with tag, hop-scotch or a bad attack of vertigo. And before the game the Vaudevilles said, with every appearance of sad-eyed honesty:

"Now, reporters, this game will be business and no funny stunts. Maybe there will be a little comedy after the third inning, but we ain't promising anything like that. We're here to play the game."

The reporters believed them, because several things seemed to bear out the idea. Blond Lizzie, with elevated skirts and a paralyzed parasol, was strolling engagingly about the lines, for one thing. For another, John Alexander Dowie, denying passionately that he was dead, waggled his lovely mohair whiskers and said he loved to see foul flies drop in centerfield. But the dream was shattered as soon as the teams went into action. What they did to the ball was enough to make all horse-hide feel bad forevermore.

The Vaudevilles went to the bat first, and started scoring right away. They quit when they grew tired, and the Theatre bunch took a whack. They grew tired a little sooner than the Vaudevilles, but the scorer gave them just as many runs, so it didn't matter. Everybody along the lines helped the game along at times. At other times nobody would move a finger, and a riot-like hush would settle on the ball works as the globule rolled around, scorned by everybody. Every once in a while one of the fielders would grow tired and nonchalantly stoll in for a sideline gaze at the busy athletes. To the credit of the crowd be it said that at such times the frantic yells of the captains for substitute fielders always won response. This was confusing to the scorer, but nobody cared about him.

May Ward, assisted by one of her Dresden dolls, helped the game along by seling her pictures. She filled Mike Shannon's tan hat with coins, and didn't have to hurt her face smiling, at that. The merest ghost of a smile was good for two quarters, and a full-sized creation crimped the target thereof as if he had been wooing seventeen best bets. The hospital is to build a new wing with the proceeds—and a trifle of a few thousand dollars or so that may be added later from other sources.

Miss Ward and the players grew tired at the beginning of the seventh inning, and they all quit. Nobody knew the score, and as soon as the captains discovered it they both naturally claimed the decision. There was no proof either way, so the scorer gave it to both of them.

"Honest" Stanley Day Retires From the Mail Order Business.

On account of his years and his increasing infirmities Stanley Day, of New Market, has retired from the mail order business. His retirement removes one of the most prominent figures from the mail order field. If not the best known and oldest man in the business, he came close to being both. Throughout the trade he was known as "Honest" Stanley Day.

The business has been turned over to his daughter, Miss Irene Day, who has been associated with her father and is quite familiar with it. Mr. Day has sent a circular letter announcing his retirement to all his customers.

APPROVED TOBIN ACCOUNTS.

Plumber Says Backes Congratulated Him on Completeness of Records.

George J. Tobin made a statement this morning relative to his examination by the Assembly Investigating Committee. The committee had finished with him, he said, and he was satisfied with the way matters had turned out. Mr. Backes congratulated him on the completeness of his records, and his evidence had been satisfactory.

At no time, Mr. Tobin said, had he objected to showing the books, because he did not want an examination of them made. His objection had been based simply on the score of inconvenience involved in taking all the heavy volumes to Trenton. Two experts worked on the books the greater part of Wednesday night, going over all accounts from 1900.

GLOWING TRIBUTE TO DAVID PRESCOTT HALL

HIS LIFE AND WORK AS DESCRIBED BY A FRIEND.

The following tribute to the late David Prescott Hall is paid by McCready Sykes, of this city, a life-long friend:

"Mr. Hall was a charter member of the Bar Association of the City of New York, organized in the early seventies and an efficient instrument in fighting the Tweed ring. He was a lawyer of the type of the best professional traditions. He was never a promoter or corporation executive, but throughout his career preserved intact the purely professional relation of lawyer and client. He was engaged in much important and bitterly contested litigation, and in the increasingly important field of equity jurisprudence he brilliantly paid the debt which David Coke said that every man owed his profession, by contributing from the bar to the precision and development of the science in whose ranks he was an enthusiastic and devoted servant. In his single-hearted devotion to his client he found full scope for a temperament, a resourcefulness, a brilliancy and keenness of mental processes, that were essentially the equipment of a fighter; for Mr. Hall was a born fighter, by the very law of his being an aggressive partisan; his nature abhorred nebulous and uncertain mental conceptions; and his partisanship was thus founded ever on conviction. This aggressive and militant equipment was always at his client's service, and wielding a spear that was ever keen to strike, he commanded the respect and admiration of his adversary; and in the love and esteem of his professional brethren he had long won the approval of that body whose approval is the ultimate and fundamental test by which the members of his profession would have their life-work judged.

"But it was in the closer and more intimate relations among his friends and in his community that the fine flowering of his character was seen. For some fifteen years he lived in the little rural community of Scotch Plains; and probably more than anyone else was a source of light and inspiration in a community where for many years were gathered an unusually large number of men and women with the best traditions of culture and of a pleasing simplicity of life. In this little world, amid congenial surroundings, Mr. Hall continuously worked for the uplifting and development of his community; he was a leading spirit in the old Fanwood Lyceum, where for many years professional men, farmers, merchants and sometimes mechanics would meet for pleasant informal debates, reading, speaking and interchange of ideas. Of a nature essentially fine and aristocratic, he was all his life discharging the obligation of men of great gifts; he put out his five talents at usury, and made his light shine among men.

"His nature was so kind and sympathetic that he illumined everyone with whom he came in contact. There was on old woman in Scotch Plains, too old and feeble to work, who for many years had properly been receiving the town aid; when Mr. Hall was overseer of the poor he had made the giving of this simple alms an act that like the quality of mercy was twice blessed; and when in other times and at other hands the poor old woman found herself treated as the subject of mere mechanical charity, she once said, 'Ah, Mr. Hall, when you were overseer, it seemed as if there were no disgrace in receiving charity through you.'

"When he came to Plainfield, he brought with him the same unwearying and enthusiastic devotion his fellow-men. So simple and unostentatious was every law of his being that in the larger community he preferred rather to work merely in the ranks, and he cared little for public office or distinction. His life was one of service, devoted to single-minded service to his fellow-men. Of his great personal charm, his broad cultivation and keen insight, that shone forth among his close personal friends, this is not the time to speak.

"He died as he had lived, in harness and in the full joy and enthusiasm of his work; giving back to his friends and his community out of the abounding largeness of his great gifts. 'Lord, thou deliveredest unto me five talents; behold, I have gained beside them five talents more.'"

SHADE TREE COMMISSION.

Notice is hereby given that the following Ordinance has been introduced before the Shade Tree Commission, read the second time and ordered engrossed preparatory to its third reading, and that it is the intention of the Commission to adopt the same at the next regular meeting of said Commission to be held at the Mayor's Office, No. 149 North Avenue, Plainfield, N. J., on Monday, the first day of July, 1907, at 7:30 o'clock p. m., at which time and place, all persons interested will be given ample opportunity to be heard thereon before said Commission, prior to the proposed adoption of said Ordinance.

ANDREW J. GAVETT, Secretary.
Plainfield, N. J., June 5, 1907.

AN ORDINANCE

Relating to the Protection, Regulation and Control of Shade Trees and City Parks in the City of Plainfield, New Jersey.

The Shade Tree Commission of the City of Plainfield, by virtue of the provisions of the Act of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey entitled: "An Act to provide for the planting and care of shade trees on the highways of the municipalities of this State," approved March 24, 1893, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, doth hereby ordain as follows:

Section 1. No person or corporation shall, without the written permit of the Shade Tree Commission, cut, break, climb with spikes, injure or remove any living tree in a public highway, or any tree or plant in a city park; or injure, misuse or remove any device placed to protect such tree or plant, or any structure or device in or around a city park and pertaining thereto; or have possession of any such structure or thing, or any part thereof.

Sec. 2. No person shall enter upon any portion of lawn or ground within a city park when notified by a sign placed in such park, or by a guardian of such park, or by a police officer, not to enter upon such lawn or ground.

Sec. 3. No person shall leave any paper or other waste material in a city park, except in the receptacles which may be provided therein for such material.

Sec. 4. No person shall fasten a horse or other animal to a tree in a public highway of the said city, or in a city park therein, or cause a horse or other animal, to stand so that said horse or animal can injure such a tree.

Sec. 5. No person shall, without the written permit of the Shade Tree Commission, attach or keep attached to a tree in a public highway or city park or to the guard or stake intended for the protection of such a tree, a rope, wire, sign or any device.

Sec. 7. No person shall, without the written permit of the Shade Tree Commission, place, or hereafter maintain, upon the ground in a public highway or city park, stone pavement or other substance which shall impede the free entrance of water and air to the roots of any tree in such highway or park without leaving an open space of ground outside the trunk of said tree in area not less than four square feet.

Sec. 7. Throughout the period of the erection or repair of a building or structure, the owner thereof shall place such guards around all nearby trees on the public highway as shall effectually prevent injury to such trees.

Sec. 8. Every person or corporation having any wire charged with electricity running through a public highway or park shall securely fasten such wire so that it shall not come into contact with the trunk, or any limb, branch or twig of any tree therein.

Sec. 9. No person or corporation shall prevent, delay or interfere with the Shade Tree Commission or its employes in the planting, pruning, spraying or removing of a tree in a public highway or city park, or in the removal of stone, cement or other substance about the trunk of a tree.

Sec. 10. Every violation by the same person or corporation of any provision of this ordinance on any day or days succeeding the first violation thereof shall constitute an additional violation for each of such succeeding days.

Sec. 11. Any person or corporation violating any of the provisions of this Ordinance shall, upon conviction thereof be punished as follows: For a first offense, by a fine not exceeding fifty dollars; for a second or any subsequent offense, a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding sixty days, or both such fine and imprisonment.

Sec. 12. This ordinance shall take effect immediately.
